

Weeks," 711. In defence of "spoils" doctrine, 396.

VOL · XII DECEMBER 1927

No · 48

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

A MONTHLY REVIEW
EDITED BY H · L · MENCKEN

50¢

FOR ONE COPY

$5.00

BY THE YEAR

ALFRED · A · KNOPF · PUBLISHER

QUALITY by KUPPENHEIMER

THE CAVALIER TUXEDO makes every man feel comfortable. Satin facings, easy sliding silk linings, the correct style, perfect handcrafting, every detail just right. There's a size and correct proportion for every man.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

STEINWAY

THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

THE FIRE BIRD, painted for the STEINWAY COLLECTION by ROCKWELL KENT

The completion, in 1910, of Stravinsky's remarkable ballet, "L'Oiseau de Feu," marked the appearance of a new and gigantic figure among contemporary composers. The flaming brilliance of its orchestration, its startling harmonic innovations, first stunned and then fascinated the musical public. . . . Today it is among the most popular of program numbers.

IN THE light of the advantages enjoyed by the owner of a Steinway piano, its extraordinary prestige is at once explicable. . . . For he experiences a unique pride of possession in the enjoyment of this beautiful instrument. He feels a deep and intimate pleasure in the music drawn from it by his family, or by himself. And he knows that his own tastes, and those of his children, are constantly the better for its refining influence.

Yet with the single exception of the concert grand, every one of the six Steinway models is a home piano, designed to meet a special condition of income or acoustics. Each is a true Steinway, incomparably rich in tone, magnificently responsive. It will serve you, as only the best things can serve you, all your days. And there lies the real index of economy. You need never buy another piano.

There is a Steinway dealer in your community, or near you, through whom you may purchase a new Steinway piano with a small cash deposit, and the balance will be extended over a period of two years. Used pianos accepted in partial exchange.

Prices: $875 and up

Plus transportation

Steinway & Sons, Steinway Hall
109 West 57th Street, New York

i

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

FROM $725 TO $3495

CHRYSLER GIVES UTMOST IN MOTOR CAR VALUE

As confirmed by ever-climbing sales, the world is recognizing that the Chrysler spirit of progressiveness, which has brought about every worth-while improvement in the industry within the past four years, positively assures these unique advantages.

See the new Chrysler models—"52," "62," "72" and Imperial "80." Make any test you wish. The more exacting your requirements, the more certain your choice of a Chrysler.

Chrysler "72"
4-door Sedan
$1595

Chrysler "52"
2-passenger DeLuxe Coupe
$795

Chrysler "62"
4-door Sedan
$1245

Chrysler
Imperial "80"
5-passenger Sedan
$3195

New Chrysler "Red-Head" Engine—designed to take full advantage of high-compression gas, is standard equipment on the roadsters of the "52," "62," "72" and sport roadster of the Imperial "80." It is also available, at slight extra cost, for all other body types of these lines, as well as for earlier Chrysler cars now in use.

All prices f. o. b. Detroit, subject to current Federal excise tax.

CHRYSLER

52 - 62 - 72 - Imperial 80 - $725 TO $3495 F.O.B. DETROIT
FOUR GREAT CARS IN FOUR PRICE CLASSES

The AMERICAN MERCURY

VOLUME XII

December 1927

NUMBER 48

TABLE OF CONTENTS

OUR WHITE FOLKS	George A. Schuyler	385
PHILOSOPHERS AS KINGS	Louis LeFevre	393
NIGHT-THOUGHTS	Virginia Moore	398
LADIES OF THE MOB	Ernest Booth	399
HEARTS AND FLOWERS—AND CASH	Henry F. Pringle	408
AMERICANA		416
PROFESSOR JERRY THOMAS	Herbert Asbury	421
A JURY CASE	Sherwood Anderson	431
THE PACING WHITE MUSTANG	J. Frank Dobie	435
THE ARTS AND SCIENCES:
Piano Technique in the Light of Experiment	Otto Ortmann	443
Prestige Among Indians	Robert H. Lowie	446
THE GRANDSON OF THE LIBERATOR	R. L. Duffus	449
EVOLUTION, OR WHAT HAVE YOU?	Knight Dunlap	458
THE VULGATE IN AMERICAN FICTION	Wallace Rice	464
TEN	Ferner Nuhn	467
THE ROLL OF HONOR	T. J. Bartlett	476
NOW WE GOT PROBEESH	Chester T. Crowell	485
AN AMERICAN MASTER	Thomas Craven	490
CLINICAL NOTES	George Jean Nathan	498
THE THEATRE	George Jean Nathan	501
THE LIBRARY	H. L. Mencken	507
THE AMERICAN MERCURY AUTHORS		511
INDEX TO VOLUME XII		512
CHECK LIST OF NEW BOOKS		xxviii
EDITORIAL NOTES		lxxxii

Unsolicited manuscripts, if not accompanied by stamped and addressed envelopes, will not be returned and the Editor will not enter into correspondence about them. Manuscripts should be addressed to The Editor and not to individuals. All accepted contributions are paid for on acceptance, without reference to the date of publication. The whole contents of this magazine are protected by copyright and must not be reprinted without permission.

Published monthly at 50 cents a copy. Annual subscription, $5.00; Canadian subscription, $5.50. . . . The American Mercury, Inc., publishers. Publication office, Federal and 19th streets, Camden, N. J. Editorial and general offices, 730 Fifth avenue, New York. London office, 38 Bedford Place, Bloomsbury, W.C. 1, London, England. . . . Printed in the United States. Copyright, 1927, by The American Mercury, Inc. . . . Entered as second class matter January 4, 1924, at the post office at Camden, N. J., under the Act of March 3, 1879. Published monthly on the 25th of the month preceding the date. Five weeks' advance notice required for change of subscribers' addresses.

Alfred A. Knopf, Publisher

H. L. Mencken, Editor

George Jean Nathan, Contributing Editor

ANNOUNCEMENT

THE AMERICAN MERCURY announces the publication of a limited edition printed on all-rag paper beginning with the issue for January 1928.

This edition is intended especially for libraries, both public and institutional, who wish a file of the magazine on paper of permanence.

But a few copies of this edition will be available to the general public at ten dollars ($10.00) per subscription per year. There will be an additional charge of fifty cents ($.50) for a Canadian address and one dollar ($1.00) for a foreign address.

The attached subscription form will be convenient if you are interested.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY 730 Fifth Avenue New York City

Please enter my subscription for the all-rag edition. I enclose ten dollars.

NAME

ADDRESS

AM. 12-27

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

The-Book-of-the-Month Club now guarantees you against missing the new books you are most anxious to read.

Handed to you by the postman— the outstanding book each month with a guarantee of satisfaction!

HENRY SEIDEL CANBY

HEYWOOD BROUN

DOROTHY CANFIELD

CHRISTOPHER MORLEY

WM. ALLEN WHITE

OVER 40,000 of the most prominent people in the country have already subscribed to the service of the Book-of-the-Month Club. Frequently, however, the simple idea behind it still seems to be misunderstood.

The average person fails to read most of the important books, because he is either too busy or too neglectful to go out and buy them. How often has this happened to you? "I certainly want to read that book!" you say to yourself, when you see a review or hear a book praised highly, by someone whose taste you respect. But, in most cases, you never "get around to it."

It is to meet this situation, chiefly, that the Book-of-the-Month Club was organized; each month its subscribers receive the outstanding new book published that month—or some other book which they have the privilege of specifying.

How is the "outstanding" book each month chosen? The Book-of-the-Month Club has asked a group of well-known critics, whose judgment as to books and whose catholicity of taste have long been known to the public, to act as a Selecting Committee. They are: Henry Seidel Canby, Chairman; Heywood Broun, Dorothy Canfield, Christopher Morley and William Allen White. Each month, the new books, of all publishers, are presented to them. From these, by a majority vote, they choose what they consider to be the most outstanding and readable book each month. The theory is—and it works!—that any book appealing strongly to a majority of five individuals of such good judgment and such differing tastes, is likely to be a book few people will care to miss reading.

Subscribers, however, are not obliged to accept the choice of the Committee. Tastes vary greatly. Before the book comes to you, you receive a carefully written report, telling what sort of book it is. If you don't judge that you will like it, you specify that some other new book be sent instead, making your choice from a list of other important new books, which are also carefully described to guide you in your choice. On the other hand, if you let the "book-of-the-month" come to you and find you are disappointed, even then you may exchange it for any other book you prefer. In other words, you are given a guarantee of satisfaction with any book you obtain upon the recommendation of the Committee.

The cost of this convenient service is—nothing. The cost of the books is the price set by the publisher himself.

Send for our prospectus, in which the details of the plan are completely outlined. It is working smoothly and satisfactorily for over 40,000 discriminating people. Your request will involve you in no obligation to subscribe.

13 M
BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB, inc.
218 W. 40th St., New York, N. Y.
Please send me, without cost, your Prospectus outlining the details of the Book-of-the-Month Club Plan. This request involves me in no obligation to subscribe to your service.
Name
Address
City	State

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

SHOT IN THE BACK

By Senator Edward I. Edwards

This is a true and amazing story of the killing of citizens by Prohibition agents, Federal, State and Municipal. Many citizens were innocent but were shot down on suspicion, out of arrogance, without investigation or warning. Do you know that the first fatal shooting was by a Federal Prohibition agent who had served two terms for forgery and was serving a sentence for highway robbery in Dannemora prison when he actually landed his job with the Department of Justice? That hardly seems possible but it is a fact. There are lots more startling truths in this, the most powerful article ever printed on Prohibition.

WHY IS BIRTH CONTROL NECESSARY?

By Havelock Ellis

Havelock Ellis needs no introduction whatever. In this article he takes up the history and morality of birth control, not only from the viewpoint of ethics but from the viewpoint of biology—of nature. Birth control, Havelock Ellis shows, was in nature's laboratory long before man started up drugstores.

WAR GUILT HISTORIANS

By Prof. Harry Elmer Barnes

The historians are at fisticuffs. We are naturally glad to see Professor Harry Elmer Barnes of Smith College and author of "The Genesis of the World War" clambering into the ring with all his doughtiness. Who started the war?—there is a question that has the historians in full fray.

WHO WANTS DIVORCE AND WHY?

By Milton Ives Livy

Mr. Livy is a prominent New York lawyer who specializes in divorce cases. He ought to know.

SHOULD THE FARMERS ASK HELP?

By C. W. Robinson

Mr. Robinson, who manages farms in five states and owns one in a sixth, writes a vigorous and forceful article which may please some persons much—and others not so much.

THE BIBLE IN ITS PLACE,

WHAT DO YOU EXPECT OF COLLEGE?

THOSE WHO WOULD WRITE MOVIES,

ARE THE JAPANESE REALLY DANGEROUS?

NAPOLEON—A SHRINE OF HATE AND FEAR and many other articles and features are in

PLAIN TALK

FOR DECEMBER

At all good newsstands. 35c a copy. $4.00 a year.

PLAIN TALK, INC. ↘ 188 West 4th Street ↘ New York City

"Just What I Always Wanted."

That is what thousands are saying about membership in the Literary Guild.

Will they say it about your Christmas Gift?

IT is always hard to choose the right gift for your best friend. Ties or socks for a man, handkerchiefs or gloves for a woman—that is what everybody thinks of and that is what makes most holiday gifts so commonplace.

This year be original, be distinctive. Send a family present of a year's subscription to the Literary Guild. No trouble or bother for you now—and all year your friends will be reminded of your holiday thought. Each month they will receive the Literary Guild's new book, something unusually fine, distinctly interesting and worth while.

Now your friends will get the attractive Christmas card reproduced above, genuine parchment, beautifully decorated in color, with your name and the name of the friend you want to remember. This card will be mailed with the first of the twelve books in time to be received before Christmas.

A year's subscription to the Literary Guild is a gift twelve times through the year, a book each month they will want to keep, will be glad to read, will thank you for, will remember you by.

There is no chance that your friend has already read any one of these books. Each book comes by mail the very day of publication, just as soon as it is on sale in the book store.

The Guild books are chosen by men and women who know books. The Guild Board of Editors are: Carl Van Doren, Editor in Chief; Glenn Frank; Zona Gale; Joseph Wood Krutch; Hendrik Willem van Loon; Elinor Wylie. No matter how intelligent you are in picking books for gifts, you cannot do what the Guild will do for you and your friends.

Select the Best Gift—and Save Money

Every month the Guild sends out thousands of copies of the book chosen for that month. Quantity buying and quantity manufacture make great savings in cost and this saving is passed on to members of the Guild. This saving is one half the cost of the twelve books.

So you receive twice the value you would ordinarily obtain. Your friends will get through the Guild membership you send them, books that would cost $35 or $40 bought any other way than through the Guild. With the Guild membership you pay only $18 for the books. If you wish to pay for the gift in monthly installments, send a dollar now with the coupon and pay $3 a month for six months.

No trouble or worry. You don't have to shop in crowded stores or run the risk of picking something that is not good. All you have to do is write the check, fill in the coupon with the name of your friend to whom you wish the subscription to go, and mail them both today. The Guild will do all the rest. We will send you an acknowledgment now, and the first Guild book with the greeting card will go to your friend in time for Christmas.

If you want your first book delivered by Christmas, send in the order before December 17th. Do this Christmas shopping now, so easily, so conveniently.

If you want to send more than one Guild subscription as a present, write a letter with the addresses. Do this now while you are thinking of it. And don't forget, a Guild subscription is an excellent all-year round present for yourself, too.

LITERARY GUILD OF AMERICA, Inc.
55 Fifth Ave., Dept. 22-M
New York City.

Please enroll my friend in the Literary Guild of America for one year. I am enclosing $1.00, and will pay you $3.00 upon receipt of your bill, and $3.00 a month for five months only. During the last six months of the year I pay you nothing.

In return you will send my friend, postage prepaid, one new book each month for one year—12 new books in all. I may cancel this subscription by giving one month's notice, in which case you will charge me the retail price of the books received and refund the unused balance.

Send books and card to

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

Bill to go to

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

Save $1.00—If you prefer to pay all at once you can save $1.00 by sending $18.00 with this blank.

Examine Free

These Amazing
Book Bargains

We Guarantee: Selections below from our Bargain Catalogues to be new and perfect stock of regular publishers, offered at tremendous reductions, due to savings effected in buying entire editions. We will refund without question the price of any book returned to us with which you are not absolutely delighted.

Examine Free

Any Current Book
Advertised

which we carry in our completely stocked Book shops. This, the Acme of Book Service, enables you to judge for yourself the books you may wish to buy for library or gift purposes. After 5 days' examination you remit publishers' price only or exchange for any other book you wish.

Book will be mailed in special Gift Cartons if Requested.

Free Examination: As descriptions are necessarily limited, send checked list of any titles below which interest you.

Publishers' prices are shown in parenthesis; our prices follow, or appear above each section.

BELLES LETTRES, ETC.

1. PROCESSION OF MASKS, Herbert S. Gorman, Pungent criticisms of literature and writers. (2.00) $1
2. DEFINITIONS—First Series. Essays by Henry S. Canby. (2.50) $1.25
3. DEFINITIONS—Second Series. (2.50) $1.25
4. CRITICAL ESSAYS, Burdett, Frank Harris, Shelley, Hawthorne, etc. (2.00) $1.25
5. ON STRANGE ALTARS, Paul Jordan Smith. Critical estimates of Cabell, Machen, Wilde, etc. (2.00) $1.25
6. YOUTH AND EGOTATRY, Essays by Pio Baroja. "The peer of modern Spanish writers."—Mencken. (2.00) $1.25
7. HELLAS AND ESSAYS, Georg Brandes. (2.50) $1
8. LAFARGO HEARN'S AMERICAN DAYS. (5.00) $2.75
9. CONVERSATIONS WITH A. FRANCE, Segur. (2.50) $1.50
10. GENIUS AND DISASTER, J. Marks. (Poe, Goethe, etc.). (3.00) $1.25
11. PUNCH, JUDY AND ESSAYS, by Maurice Baring on Literature and Life. (2.50) $1.25
12. MANY MINDS, Carl Van Doren, On Menckel, Shetman, Sartavara, Milly, F.P.A., etc. (2.50) $1.50
13. POETRY AND CRITICISMS, E. Stowell. (1.50) $1.75
14. LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS TO HIS SON, 2 vols. in 1, 843 pages. (4.00) $2.25
15. MARK TWAIN'S LETTERS, 2 volumes. (6.00) $3
16. MARK TWAIN'S SPEECHES. (3.00) $1.50

LITERATURE (FICTION)

75c Each

Publishers' Price $2, $2.50

17. Swinerton, F. YOUNG FELIX.
18. Maugham, S. MRS. CRADDOCK.
19. Douglas, G. HOUSE WITH THE GREEN SHUTTERS.
20. Street, Julian. TIDES.
21. Roberts, E. M., TIME OF MAN.
22. Hamilton, Cosmo. CONFESSION.
23. Schnitzler, A., SHEPHERDS PIPE.
24. Tolstoy, THE DEVIL.
25. Anonymous, DIFFICULTY OF GETTING MARRIED.
26. V. De L'Isle-Adam, CLAIRE LENOIRE.
27. Mirabeau, O., CALVARY.
28. Ley, M. P., MATRIX ADOLESCENT YOUTH.
29. Masters, E. Lee, SKEETERS KIRBY.

Exceptional Bargains

46. HISTORY OF HUMAN MARRIAGE, Prof. E. Westermarck. Complete, 3 vols., 1800 pages, boxed. (25.00) $5.75
47. GOLDEN BOUGH, Fraser. (5.00) $3.75
48. PECULIARITIES OF BEHAVIOR, Wm. Stekel. 2 vols. (10.00) $6.50
49. OLD TIMES, W. C. Meller. The origin of many customs. (4.00) $1.50
50. MAGNIFICENT IDLER (Walt Whitman), C. Rogers. First ed. (2.50) $1.75
51. STORY OF CALIFORNIA, S. E. White. (2.50) $1.25
52. KING JOHN, Joseph T. Shtpley, The American "Ulysses." (2.50) $1.50
53. EIGHT YEARS WITH WILSON'S CABINET, Sect'y David V. Houston. 2 vols. (10.00) $5.95
54. THE CANNING WONDER, Arthur Machen. A beautiful, weird tale. Illus. (3.50) $2
55. BANKING THROUGH THE AGES, Hoggson. Ancient and Medieval times. (3.00) $1.75
56. THREE ROUSING CHEERS FOR THE HOLLO BOYS, Corey Ford. Hilarious parodies on the literature of our boyhood. (2.00) $1
67. BEST AMERICAN STORIES OF ALL AUTHORS. Over 1300 pages. 2 vols. boxed, ($5) $2.75

THREE CONVENIENT

N. Y. BOOKSHOPS

Open evenings to 10

Wash. Heights: 560 W. 180th St.

Concourse: 2023 Jerome Ave.

East Bronx: 832 Westchester Ave.

Three completely stocked bookshops offering thousands of new book bargains which you are cordially invited to inspect.

DOSTOYEVSKY, F.

(Leather Bound Gift Editions)
(Each $3) $1.75

30. WHITE NIGHTS.
31. FRIEND OF THE FAMILY.
32. THE GAMBLERS.
33. RAW YOUTH.
34. THE THIEF.

BIOGRAPHY, ETC.

35. HEINE, Michael Monahan (2.00) $1
36. LENIN, Leon Trotsky (2.50) $1
37. CASANOVA, Buck (2.00) $1
38. NAPOLEON, by All, his valet (3.00) $1.50
39. LIFE AND ART OF PAUL CEZANNE, (3.00) $1.50
40. LIFE OF WM. HAZLITT, P. P. Howe. (6.00) $2.50
41. DOSTOYEVSKY—LETTERS AND REMINISCENCES. (2.50) $1.50
42. G. B. SHAW, J. S. Collins. (2.50) $1.50
43. CASANOVA—ADVENTURER AND LOVER, Le Gros. (4.50) $2.50
44. LOVE LETTERS OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE. (1.50) $1.50
45. AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF HAECKEL. (3.00) $1.25

TRAVEL, MISCEL.

57. JOURNAL OF A JEWISH TRAVELLER, Israel Cohen. Strange travel tales of the Diaspora. (4.00) $2
58. CONSTANTINOPLE, Young. History and Travels. (5.00) $2.50
59. CAMBRIDGE, PAST AND PRESENT, Davens. History, travel. (6.00) $2.50
60. BY WATERWAYS TO GOTHAM, L. R. Freeman. (3.50) $1.75
61. THE LONG OLD ROAD IN CHINA, L. Warner. Adventures of a recent expedition to the Black City of Marco Polo. (5.00) $2.50
62. WANDERINGS ON THE CONTINENT, C. Hamilton. Illus. (5.00) $2
63. MUSIC AND MIND, Trotter. Psychological aspect. (3.00) $1.50
64. WOMEN—An Inquiry, Willia Muir. (1.00) $1.50
65. THE NEW INFERNO, Stephen Phillips. 16 remarkable drawings set in a poem of powerful appeal. 10x13. Limited 275 copies. (7.50) $3.50
66. HISTORY OF THE BRIDGE, Frank Brangwyn. Illus. (15.00) $6.50
68. MURDER AT SMUTTY NOSE and 14 other FAMOUS MURDERS. Edited Pearson. Illus. ($3.00) $1.50

ORDER INSTRUCTIONS

Order by number, enclosing 8c per volume for postage. Orders over $10.00 sent postpaid. Enclose money or references.

SEIFFERS, National Booksellers

832 Westchester Avenue, NEW YORK CITY

Catalogue mailed regularly upon request

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

All in ONE Volume

The Complete Works of Edgar Allan

POE

AT LAST it is ready! The publishing achievement of the age has just come from the press. The Complete Works of Edgar Allan Poe in ONE volume, completely re-edited and in brand-new, sumptuous format, is now being delivered to Poe lovers everywhere.

Those who ordered this wonderful book in advance are already enjoying the weirdest of all weird tales, the most heart-piercing lyrics of sadness ever penned by the hand of man. Poe is hailed by the entire world as America's greatest writer. Not even Emerson or Mark Twain can dim the glory of this forlorn genius who staggered to his grave under a burden of disengagement and disdain.

You have wanted this Poe, this volume of 850,000 words, 1,300 pages, 185 titles, containing every short story, poem, and tale he ever wrote, and a biographical sketch by Hervey Allen, author of "Israfel." ALL IN ONE VOLUME!

Eleven Volumes in ONE

Here, in this one slender, beautiful volume is the entire contents of a 11-volume set. Here is a book you can pack in one corner of your travelling bag;—an entire Poe library to shorten your journey or brighten long, dull evenings at home.

Printed on the finest India paper in specially selected type and bound in the famous Lifetime Fabrikoid, this volume will do honor to any library and will fit appropriately among other books costing many times the price.

Read It—FREE!

Without a penny cost to you and without obligating yourself in any way you may have this book to read at your leisure. Then, if you have not fallen irresistibly under Poe's enthralling spell, if you do not feel that this is the best Poe you could buy at any price, return it at our expense.

WALTER J. BLACK, Inc.
171 Madison Avenue
NEW YORK CITY, N.Y.

EACH TITLE COMPLETE

The Raven	The Masque of the Red Death	Ulalume
Annabel Lee	The Pit and the Pendulum	The Haunted Palace
The Gold Bug	Mesmeric Revelation	Tamerlane
The Murders in the Rue Morgue	The Assignment	The Poetic Principle
The Premature Burial	The Oblong Box	Longfellow's Ballads
The Fall of the House of Usher	Some Words with a Mummy	Old English Poetry
The Black Cat	The Bells	Nathaniel Hawthorne
The Devil in the Belfry		Charles Dickens Cryptography and many others

WALTER J. BLACK, Inc.,
171 Madison Ave., Dept. 4012,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen: You may send me for one week's free examination your new one-volume Edition of Poe's Complete Works, printed in large, clear type on genuine India Paper, grained Fabrikoid binding. I will either return book at your expense or send you $5.45 in full payment within one week.

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

CITY.....STATE.....

☐ Mark X here if you prefer your copy bound in Persian Morocco at only $1.50 more. Same approval privilege.

ix

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

A PAPER WITH ONE SUBSCRIBER and that one—YOU!

IN MANHATTAN was a rich man who had a newspaper written and printed every week for his private consumption.

The paper was so constructed that it gave him in one hour a complete survey of the world's news.

If you were to publish a paper for your personal use and enjoyment, a paper to tell you precisely what has happened in the world, "to give you more information on the news of the day in quicker time than any other publication," we believe that paper would closely resemble TIME.

TIME is not written for the masses, does not deal in millions of circulation. TIME is written as a very personal document for the active man and woman of high intelligence and quick apperceptions.

From every news-source in the world, TIME collects all available information on every important event. Verifies it. Compresses it into brief, vivid paragraphs.

Twelve Sparkling Issues for only $1.00

Pin a dollar bill to the coupon below for twelve world pictures—painted with the wisdom that is TIME's own. You save about half what the next twelve issues of TIME would cost on the news stand.

Sign, tear off, and mail the coupon now.

TIME
The Weekly Newsmagazine

TIME, Incorporated,
25 West 45th Street,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

I want to keep my world picture strictly up - to - date. Will you please help me do it with TIME for the next twelve (12) weeks? I enclose $1.00.

() Check here if you prefer to be billed.

Name.....

Street.....

City.....State..... 1M

"I know no other equally adequate and equally brief survey of the weekly news."

—Newton D. Baker.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

NOW you can get the World's Foremost Encyclopaedia as chosen by The American Library Association at a saving of 48%

THE American Library Association, our country's highest authority on books, in its list of the one hundred reference works most essential to every library puts the dictionary first. And second—far above all other books of its kind—The New International Encyclopædia.

This ranking has been given The New International because it contains more facts, states them more understandably, and makes them more easily accessible than any other work in the language.

The final authority

THE New International is universal in its scope. It embodies the wisdom of all races, all countries, all times. But it is also in the highest, finest sense, American. It contains facts concerning American places, people, inventions, businesses, sports and institutions, that no reference work edited abroad can possibly supply.

Written by the foremost scholars, leaders in every line of thought and action, The New International is referred to constantly in universities, libraries and courts of law as the final word in any dispute that arises. And it is knowledge so clearly presented and arranged that anyone from a school child to a college president can find what he wants and understand what he finds.

You can save 48% if you act quickly!

EVERY ambitious American can now own this greatest of all encyclopædias. The New International in the beautiful new Popular Edition—which gives you the full contents of the 25-volume set bound in 13 large volumes—can now be obtained at a saving of nearly 48 per cent!

But we can guarantee this low price for only the one contract now in the hands of the printers. To be sure of getting your set at this price you should act at once.

The new Popular Edition contains 20,000 pages of text matter; 80,000 separate articles; 100 beautiful full-page plates, in natural colors, of animal, plant and insect life; 200 full-page half-tone illustrations in black-and-white; 600 full-page tinted engravings; 175 double-page colored maps, and thousands of smaller illustrations. It is identical in contents, text, pictures and page size with the regular edition.

The best of all Christmas gifts

Now you can give your dear ones this finest Christmas present—a set of The New International Encyclopædia—the very gift that in thousands of homes is giving pleasure and satisfaction 365 days in the year!

Write now—the time is limited!

MAIL the coupon today for the handsome 56-page copy of "Enlightening the World," telling what The New International will bring you—in profitable ideas—in education—in enjoyment—in practical money-saving helps!

As a special inducement for immediate action we will, for a limited

FREE

This handsome $30 Erskine-Danforth book-table will be supplied free to readers of this publication who purchase the Popular Edition of The New International Encyclopædia during the life of this offer. In solid maple, Early American style, antique walnut tones. The actual size is 30x20x28 inches.

period, include free with each set of The New International Encyclopædia sold to readers of this publication, the fine book-table shown above, usually sold at $30.

FREE

Don't delay—mail the coupon today!

Clip and send for free booklet today

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY
449 Fourth Avenue, New York

M-12

Send me today, free and without obligation, the 56-page copy of "Enlightening the World," which tells me about the great New International Encyclopædia, the beautiful, especially designed Book-table (offered free for a limited time only) and the easy terms of payment.

Name _____
Street _____ Occupation _____
City _____ State _____

A small initial payment places
THE NEW INTERNATIONAL ENCYCLOPÆDIA
in your home immediately

UNKNOWN AUTHORS

IN days gone by some of the world's best literature lingered unacclaimed after its first publication. Sometimes it was many years before the praise of competent critics reached the public ear, and the unknown author started into fame.

The unknown author of to-day has a better chance. The book-loving public is on the watch for him, scanning the pages of the critical journals in order not to miss the rising of a star upon the literary horizon.

The most famous of all critical journals is "The Times" (of London) Literary Supplement. Praise in its columns is the highest honour for which a new author can wish, for it is known to be absolutely independent and impartial, and its reviewers (though anonymous, according to the rule of "The Times") are the most famous authors and critics of the day.

"The Times" Literary Supplement gives the best and soundest review of every new book of any interest or importance, wherever published. Its weekly leading article on some subject of current interest; its complete bibliography; its notes on sales and other special features, make it eagerly read by thousands of discerning booklovers in all parts of the world.

The Times

(LONDON)

LITERARY SUPPLEMENT

A Separate and Complete Weekly Journal

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES

The yearly subscription price of the LITERARY SUPPLEMENT OF THE LONDON TIMES is $4.20. This price includes postage for delivery of the copy direct from the publishers to your address. If you wish, you may accept the special offer now being made (to U. S. and Canadian subscribers only) of a subscription for both THE AMERICAN MERCURY and the LITERARY SUPPLEMENT for one year each for only $6.50 (full value $9.20). Your order for the LITERARY SUPPLEMENT OF THE LONDON TIMES, or for the special MERCURY club offer, should be sent to THE AMERICAN MERCURY, 730, Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Use
This Form

THE AMERICAN
MERCURY,
730, 5th Ave.,
New York, N.Y.

Gentlemen:

Enclosed please find
$6.50, for which send

THE AMERICAN MERCURY
and the LITERARY SUPPLEMENT OF THE LONDON TIMES to the address below.

NAME

LOCAL ADDRESS

POST OFFICE AND STATE

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

The Unfinished Story

The girl got $6 a week—and was lonely. "Piggy"—you know his kind—was waiting downstairs. He knew where music and champagne could be had. But that night she didn't go. That was Lord Kitchener's doing. But another night—O. Henry tells about it in one of his inimitable stories.

The Moth and the Bright Flame

For the first time—this girl—starved of pleasure and of pretty clothes—looked into the dance hall, yellowed, lighted and noisy—but gay—gay and filled with girls and men—who to her loneliness looked good. That night she went—and then—but let O. Henry tell you the rest of the story.

Finish This Story for Yourself

New York had seemed so wonderful—art had seemed so big—but New York turned a cold shoulder—art proved hard and bitter. Alone in a big city, at the end of her resources, she was too weary to cry. This special day she went out to seek—not glory or fame—but just for something to eat. She found—but let the story be told by O. Henry.

The Complete Works of O. HENRY

Now Published in One Volume!

and the price is only

$2⁹⁸

Examine It 7 Days Free

When the Police Cut In

Bright and sunny and joyous New York looked to them. Then, on this first gorgeous day of their marriage, across their path there fell the shadow of the police, black, grim. To the man it seemed as though the sun had set forever on the promise of life. But the girl knew better. And so will you when you read this romance of everyday life by O. Henry.

NO ONE else ever found such fascinating, poignant stories to tell, or told them with such sympathy and humor—the kind of humor that smiles at life itself, mingles your amusement with your tears, and plucks at your heartstring.

Short, pointed, witty—sprinkled with vivid slang—and always carrying the punch of that unexpected twist at the end, O. Henry's tales always leave you gasping with delighted surprise at the unforeseen climax. And no matter who the characters are—shop girls, hoboes, actors, policemen, thieves, clubmen or stenographers—O. Henry lays bare their souls, and makes your heart beat in sympathy and understanding. No wonder millions have become "O. Henry fans."

And now these stories—over 270 of them—very one the master ever wrote—have been collected into one volume of nearly 1400 pages, printed on the new opaque thin paper, beautifully bound in cloth; although the type used is larger than ordinary newspaper type, the volume is only 1 1/2 inches thick! And the price is only $2.98.

No one knew better than O. Henry how to hold the reader in suspense. With a glow of pleasure you will breathlessly read on to the surprising climax of "A Municipal Report" or "The Gift of the Magi." With increasing dread you will await the tragic conclusion of "The Furnished Room." And you will suddenly explode with mirth over the topsyturvy finish of "Jeff Peters as a Personal Magnet." O. Henry never wrote a poor story! You will compare them by saying "one is better than another." This volume offers a feast of reading fit for the gods.

Do You Know O. Henry's New York?

It was the big town of pre-Volstead, pre-war days. Here his best work was done, and here he loved best to wander o' nights, like the good caliph Haroun al Raschid, in search of adventure. Here he met "Fuzzy," the dilapidated gentleman, being sent home in the millionaire's car—"Mazie" who was "eighteen and a saleslady in the gent's gloves"—and dozens of others—now all vividly alive forever in his brilliant pages. O. Henry knew and loved his New York well. He waved a wand over its sordid realities and it became a city of supreme mystery and romance.

SEND NO MONEY

You will pick up this beautiful volume evening after evening, for months, sure of royal entertainment every time. Remember, here is every word O. Henry ever wrote—the "complete works" that fill eighteen regular-sized volumes in the standard edition, costing several times the price of this volume—yours for only $2.98, plus a few cents postage. Send no money. Just pay the postman who delivers the book. Keep and read the stories for a week, then if you can bring yourself to part with the volume return it and you will receive your money back. Act today, for the response to this announcement, from the thousands of O. Henry lovers, will surely exhaust the present edition, and quickly! NELSON DOUBLEDAY, INC., Dept. H 8912, Garden City, New York.

Nelson Doubleday, Inc.
Dept. H 8912
Garden City, N.Y.
Please send me complete works of O. Henry, containing 273 stories, in one volume. I will pay the postman $2.98 plus carrying charges. You are to return my money at once if I return the book within a week after its receipt.
Name.....
Address.....
City.....State.....

xiii

Three Christmas Gifts

Civilized entertainment revealing how much there is in this country of ours to chew upon and cackle over.

Fearless comment on what lies behind the façade of the daily news. Virile reviews of books and plays.

Enduring stories of all time written by the masters. A monthly feast of things one ought to read.

CHRISTMAS is merry but let us make it merrier with this exceptional bargain — The American Mercury, The Nation and Golden Book — a $13.00 purchase for the special price of EIGHT DOLLARS

You may order the magazines sent to one, two or three addresses

THIS COUPON IS WORTH $5 IF USED BEFORE JANUARY 1

Enclosed find $8 for which please send with Christmas Gift Card from _____ Address _____

THE AMERICAN MERCURY to _____

Address _____

THE NATION to _____

Address _____

THE GOLDEN BOOK to _____

Address _____

Additional Postage: Canada, 50c; Foreign, $1.00 for each magazine.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY, 730 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

Columbia University

offers courses for home study in the following subjects:—

Accounting	Christianity, History of	English Literature	Literature—Continued
Actuarial Mathematics	Classics	European History	English
Agriculture	Community Organization	Finance	French
Algebra	Composition	Fire Insurance	Greek
American Government	Dramatic	Foreign Exchange and	Italian
American History	Elementary English	Finance	Juvenile
American Literature	English,	French	Latin
Art	Fundamentals of	Geometry	Spanish
French	French	German	Magazine Articles
Italian	Italian	Government	Marketing
Spanish	Latin Prose	Grammar	Mathematics
Astronomy	Lyric Poetry	Greek	Mechanical Drawing
Banking	Spanish	Harmony	Personnel Administration
Biblical Literature	Contemporary Novel	History	Philosophy
Greek New Testament	Cost Accounting	American	Photoplay Composition
Bookkeeping	Current Literature	Christian Church	Poetry
Boy Scouting	Drafting	European	Politics
Budgets	Drama	Insurance	Physics
Business Administration	Dramatic Composition	Italian	Psychology
Business English	French	Juvenile Story Writing	Public Speaking
Business Law	Italian	Labor Problems	Religion
Business Mathematics	Modern	Latin	Romance Languages
Business Organization	Economics	Literature	Secretarial Studies
Business Statistics	Economic Geography	American	Short Story
Calculus	Economic History of the	Biblical	Sociology
Child Psychology	United States	Classical	Spanish
Children's Literature	English	Comparative	Speech Composition
		Current	Typewriting Etc., etc.

These courses have been prepared and adapted by Columbia instructors to meet the special requirements of mail instruction. Every student conducts his work under the personal direction of a member of the University teaching staff. While each course is planned to cover all basic material essential to a full understanding of the subject there is sufficient elasticity to adapt it to the individual needs of each student.

The University is prepared to send on request, full information about the scope and conduct of these home study courses. Use the form below. If you care to write a letter briefly outlining your educational needs and interests it will enable the instructors to offer helpful suggestions. Mention the subjects which are of interest to you even if they are not listed above, because additions are constantly being made to the curriculum.

Columbia University,
University Extension—Home Study Department,
New York, N. Y.

Please send me full information about Columbia University Home Study Courses and their conduct.

I am interested in the following subject: _____

Name _____ Occupation _____

Street and Number _____

City _____ State _____ Am. Mercury 12-27

Book Bargains

52 pages of unusual values in our annual Holiday catalog—

now ready and will be sent free on request. This interesting catalog contains more than 1000 titles offered at half price or less. Ask us to send you a copy and get your name on our mailing list.

THE EASTERN BOOK COMPANY
235-239 West 23rd St., New York, N. Y.

AN IDEAL CHRISTMAS PRESENT

The Works of Brann the Iconoclast

The fiery genius of his age.
The most unique character in American literature.

Two volumes, elegantly bound in Artcraft leather with gold tops and silk headbands.

Price $10.00 per set. Only 384 sets left.

Remit check or money order with order.

THE BRANN PUBLISHERS, Inc.
225 West 80th Street, New York, N. Y.

Original Lane Translation of The Arabian Nights

Complete in One Exquisite Volume

The most scholarly version—complete, with the translator's famous notes on Oriental customs, is now offered in one luxurious 1280-page volume instead of the four big books of the ordinary edition.

Those who have read two or three of these stories in simplified form will be amazed by the real stories (124 in all) with their revelations of the marvelous life of Baghdad in the golden age of the Caliphs and of Cairo under the Memlook Sultans.

A Volume of Rare Beauty A Perfect Gift—

Bound either in soft flexible Spanish Fabrikoid, maroon with black tracery ($6.00); or in full limp leather ($8.00). Bible paper, 4-color frontispiece, boxed. Either style sent on approval; pay or return in 5 days.

5% Discount for cash with order.
Money-back guarantee of satisfaction. Immediate shipment, postpaid, to any address if you order promptly.

THE PICKWICK PUBLISHERS, Inc.
Dept. 14 101 Park Ave., New York xvi

Book Catalog

SEND FOR IT! It lists remainders, new publications, popular editions. We pay transportation charges on books to any point in the world. Ask for Catalog No. 28 M.

Hochschild, Kohn & Co.
Baltimore, Md.

Go to Your Bookseller!

No merchant in your community has such an extensive stock of Christmas gifts as your bookseller.

This magazine offers you a catalog of the latest books of all publishers. Choose your books and your bookseller will supply them.

Give Books for Christmas

BOOKS for XMAS

at reduced prices!

THAT MAN HEINE
REVOLT OF MODERN YOUTH (Reg. $3.00)
THE COMPANIONATE MARRIAGE
NAPOLEON
O RARE BEN JOHNSON
THE DOCTOR LOOKS AT LOVE AND LIFE
REVOLT IN THE DESERT and any other $3.00 Book
$2.59 POST PAID

Important Works—Reduced!

Rise of American Civilization by Prof. Beard.....	($12.50)	9.98
The Human Body by Dr. Clendening ..	(5.00)	4.29
America by Van Loon.....	(5.00)	4.29
The President's Daughter by Nan Britton.....	(5.00)	4.29
The American Tragedy by Dreiser ..	(5.00)	4.29
World's Illusion by Jacob Wasserman ..	(5.00)	4.29
Why We Behave Like Human Beings by Geo. Dorsey.....	(3.50)	2.98
"Boss" Tweed.....	(4.00)	3.59
Mother India by Margaret Mayo.....	(3.75)	3.29
The Right To Be Happy by Mrs. Bertrand Russell.....	(3.00)	2.59
Men of Destiny by Walter Lippmann..	(2.50)	2.09
Morrow's Almanack.....	(2.00)	1.59
All $2.00 Fiction $1.59 postpaid All $2.50 Fiction $1.98 postpaid

FREE "Arnold Bennett," a biography by his wife, given with every 4-book order.
Make up your list today.

C. O. D.'s small extra charge; add 10c west of Mississippi and Canada. Send for "THE LANTERN," a unique catalogue guide. FREE.

BOOK LOVERS LEAGUE DEPT. M-12
405 Lexington Avenue New York, N. Y.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

"Comment ça va?" she said, with a laugh

—and I astounded her with my reply

PEGGY took great delight in jollyng me. One day, when I was calling on her, she greeted me in French. "Comment ça va?" she said.

"Now, Peg," I warned, with a grin, "no French. You know I can't understand it." Peggy chuckled. "Oh, yes, I keep forgetting," she apologized.

It was a habit with Peggy to break frequently into French. Sometimes I half suspected she did this intentionally, because she knew it embarrassed me.

"You know, Bob," remarked Peggy, after we had chatted awhile, "it's a pity you didn't take French at school."

I nodded, feeling rather small. "Yes, I wish I had taken French, Peg, I certainly feel like an outsider nowadays among some of my friends who speak French."

There was a pause. "I suppose it's too late to learn now," I added, looking at her questioningly.

Peggy shrugged her shoulders. "Yes, I suppose so," she agreed.

We chatted a while longer. Finally I rose to go.

"Good-bye," I said, as I was leaving.

"Au revoir," replied Peggy, with a faint smile.

* * *

A Big Surprise

Several months passed before I saw Peggy again. Once more she greeted me with her usual, "Comment ça va?" She was not prepared for my reply.

"Je me porte très bien," I answered, in perfect French.

Peggy's eyes opened wide. I rattled on in French—talked about the weather—the latest shows, anything I could think of. To Peggy's amazement, I talked only in French.

Finally I said in English, "Don't you agree with me, Peg?"

Peggy's face was a blank. "Wh-where on earth did you learn to speak French?" she gasped.

I laughed. "Remember the last time I was here, Peg? . . . Well, after I left I began thinking. I realized that a foreign language is part of every cultured person's education. I determined I would learn French. But how, was a problem. I didn't have time to go to school. I couldn't afford to engage a private teacher. I didn't know what to do.

"But one day I heard a fellow at the office talking about a marvelous new way to learn French! I asked him about it.

"He told me that it was a course by mail—a course of lessons that you studied at home.

"He told me how his sister had taken the course—how she had actually learned to speak French in a short time.

How I Learned French Without a Teacher

"Well, I sent for the course. . . . Have you ever heard of the Hugo Language Institute, Peg?"

Peggy nodded. "It's located in London, isn't it?"

"Yes," I replied, "it's one of the oldest, most conservative language institutes in the world. They recently made a remarkable achievement in the teaching of languages. They put their expert knowledge of languages instruction—their years of experience in teaching French—the secrets of their quick, accurate method—into a set of printed lessons—lessons which anyone can study at home.

"The course is really wonderful, Peg. It's called the 'At-Sight' method. Methods. Just think—only a short time ago I didn't know a word of French. Now I can speak French—read French books and use French phrases in conversation!

"And I only studied a few minutes a day! No tiresome exercises to do—no boring class-room drills. It was real fun learning. Everything was so clear—simple—easy. Honestly, Peg, the Hugo 'At-Sight' French Course is a wonderful accomplishment in language instruction!"

This story is typical. You, too, can now learn French at home—quickly, easily, pleasantly—just as thousands of others are doing by the celebrated Hugo "At-Sight" Method. Twenty-four fascinating lessons, carefully planned. The most ingenious method of learning French ever discovered!

Try It 5 Days FREE

We shall be glad to send you the complete course FREE FOR 5 DAYS so that you may see it and judge it for yourself. Within the free examination period you have the privilege of returning the course, without cost or obligation, or keeping it as your own and sending only $2 as a first payment, and thereafter $2 a month until the full price of $12 has been paid.

You are the judge. Simply return the course within 5 days if you are not fascinated and delighted with it. If you act promptly, a valuable French-English Dictionary, containing 45,000 words, will be included, without additional cost.

We urge you to clip and mail this coupon to-day. Doubleday, Page & Co., Dept. F-5512, Garden City, New York.

Doubleday, Page & Co., Dept. F-5512
American Representatives of Hugo's
Language Institute of London, Garden City, New York.

Please send me the Hugo "French-At-Sight" Course in 24 lessons, for free examination, and include the French-English Dictionary. Within 5 days I will either return the course and dictionary or send you $2 at that time and $2 each month thereafter until $12 has been paid.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

Reference or Occupation.....

5% discount for cash with order

XVII

ANDRÉ GIDE AND HIS GREATEST BOOK THE COUNTERFEITERS

ANDRÉ GIDE is coming into his own in America. Of The Counterfeiters, out less than two months, three printings have already been required. The response of critics and public alike has been for the most part unanimous.

It has been praised for almost as many reasons as it has found readers, but all come away from it with the feeling that here is something genuinely new, significant, and provocative. Thus Gide has been compared variously to Balzac, Fielding, Dickens, Thackeray, Flaubert, Proust, Tolstoy, and Dostoevsky. It is a sufficiently Catholic assortment, but it is indicative of the respect in which suddenly he is held and of the diversity of the effects he has on his readers.

Gide's earlier books have had to face an almost complete indifference in America. Strait Is the Gate (La Porte étroite), one of the most delicate and searching analyses of the Puritan conscience that have ever been written, has been available for three years; Lafcadio's Adventures (Les Caves du Vatican), a fantastic romance which combines the elements of a detective story with the salt of penetrating satire, was published here in 1925. Neither book has as yet made any great impression on the American reading public, although both stand in the very front rank of Gide's work, as does L'Immoraliste, soon to be translated. It is to be hoped that the public which now accepts The Counterfeiters will extend its curiosity to embrace these former products of the same pen.

The reasons for the present success of The Counterfeiters are not far to seek. They are to be found in its novelty, its

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

compelling honesty, its audacity, its profound humanity; in its sheer artistry and overwhelming power. There are some twenty characters in the story. We pick up and follow for a time the thread of their several interrelated lives. There is a complete absence of the usual paraphernalia of the novel—no elaborately contrived backgrounds, no "settings," no clogging attempts to explain these characters in terms of external conditions. Gide is concerned with the inner manifestations of the spirit; he has no time for mere interior decoration. Events spring from events as spontaneously as in life. The characters come together, part, advance, recede; their destinies are being shaped by forces which they neither control nor know. The book comes to no conclusive end; indeed, it has no real beginning. All this has a deceptive air of improvisation; and Gide improvises as in a larger sense does life itself—lavishly, with seeming gratuity. But behind this apparent artlessness there is concealed the hand of the craftsman, a novelist of genius whose concern for the purity of his art has in no wise lessened the human interest of his writing.

In the expectation that it may contribute something to the appreciation of his work, the publisher has prepared an illustrated eight-page circular on André Gide. It contains a short biography, the history of some of his more important books, and a discussion of his ideas and tendencies. It will be mailed free upon request.

BY ANDRÉ GIDE:
Strait Is the Gate, $2.50; Lafcadio's Adventures, $2.50; Dostoevsky, $2.50.

THE COUNTERFEITERS, $3.00

ALFRED A. KNOPF

730 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

A Gift that COMPLIMENTS and COMPLEMENTS

the recipient. COMPLIMENTS him because it recognizes his alertness of mind, his desire to use English correctly in speech and writing. COMPLEMENTS him because it rounds out his knowledge of the language—gives the authoritative definition, spelling, etymology, pronunciation of all words in general use, new words, scientific terms, etc.

THE WINSTON SIMPLIFIED DICTIONARY NEW ENCYCLOPEDIA EDITION

Edited by William Dodge Lewis Formerly Deputy Supt. of Instruction, Penna.
Henry Seidel Canby Yale University Thos. K. Brown, Jr. Formerly of Haverford College

The one dictionary which meets present-day needs in Home, School and Office

Opinions

Mary Roberts Rinehart
"In ease of handling and ease of use—a real achievement."

Booth Tarkington
"It has a very liberal and helpful inclusion of new words, which makes it especially useful and modern."

Christopher Morley
"A grand piece of work."

Harvard University
"Definitions of words are most concisely and clearly set forth."—Bliss Perry, Prof. of Eng. Lit.

A. Edward Newton
"If I can get an opportunity of saying a word in favor of this book, be very sure I shall do so."

Zona Gale
"I want to express my satisfaction and pleasure in the New Winston Dictionary."

University of Chicago
"A real advance in the art of dictionary making."—Max Mason, President.

Gamaliel Bradford
"A most valuable and important addition to my library."

Thomas W. Lamont
"It is something I have needed for a long time."

Thin Paper Edition—as illustrated. Size $6\frac{3}{4}$ x $8\frac{1}{2}$ inches, weight $2\frac{1}{2}$ lbs., round corners, patent thumb index, gold stamping.

Bound in Art Kraft, colored edges.....$5.00 net
Genuine Flexible Persian Morocco (black), limp style, gold title, red under gold edges.....$7.50 net
De Luxe Red Turkey Morocco, limp style, red under gold edges.....$10.00 net

The Art Kraft binding makes an excellent gift that will continue to look well with constant hard use. The more exquisite bindings will be appreciated particularly where harmony with rich surroundings is essential. Any choice from these three handsome bindings assures you a gift that will be in good taste anywhere.

At booksellers and stationers, or send coupon.

THE JOHN C. WINSTON COMPANY
1212 WINSTON BUILDING PHILADELPHIA

A New Book on a New Plan

"Simplified" means that it defines every word so that its use and meaning can be understood instantly. It is not an abridgment of any other work. The vocabulary itself, the definitions, the illustrations, the typography—everything in this work has the advantage of the most up-to-date and scholarly treatment.

Easy to Use

Though the volume comprises over 1500 pages, the use of Bible paper has reduced the size and weight to the point of easy handling. The patent thumb index, large clear type and directness of presentation make it possible to find the desired word quickly.

Over 1500 pages—3000 New, Original Illustrations

Complete—Authoritative

More than 100,000 words and phrases in general and literary use are defined, including the many new words that have recently come into use: obsolete, archaic, dialectic words; colloquialisms; technical and scientific words; Biblical and mythological proper names; foreign words and phrases. Supplies the pronunciation and syllabification of words, numbered meanings, and also synonyms and antonyms.

3000 new and original colored plates and black-and-white illustrations further simplify the text. Includes a 32-Page Atlas and Gazetteer.

A GIFT FOR A FRIEND —OR TO YOURSELF

THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO.,
1212 Winston Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

Please send, all charges prepaid, the New Encyclopedic Edition—Winston Simplified Dictionary (thin paper), in style checked below. I will return it within five days at your expense or remit price.

- ☐ Art Kraft Edition, $5.00.
☐ Persian Morocco Edition, $7.50.
☐ Red Turkey Morocco Edition, $10.00.
Check above the style desired.

Name

Address

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

FOR JANUARY

(Out December 24th)

Joseph Hergesheimer

Sinclair Lewis

James Branch Cabell

Mr. Lewis returns to the gay mood of "Babbitt," and presents one of Mr. Babbitt's intimates, Mr. Lowell Schmaltz, of Zenith, in a monologue, "The Man Who Knew Coolidge." It is the longest piece ever to be printed in THE AMERICAN MERCURY, but connoisseurs will read every word of it, and then mourn for more. Lewis was never happier in his observation, or more riotous in his humor.

Mr. Hergesheimer discusses Mr. Cabell, as writer and as man. No one could do it better. The two men have been close friends for years, and Mr. Hergesheimer is thoroughly familiar with the processes of the Cabellian mind. His article is a searching piece of criticism and a superb piece of prose.

Many other capital things will be in the January number. Simply to list them would sound like braggadocio. It will be the best number THE AMERICAN MERCURY has ever issued.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

The American Mercury

As a CHRISTMAS GIFT

is an indication of taste and discrimination in the donor. Send subscriptions to your friends and relatives—gifts subtly complimentary—and you save some money:—

2 subscriptions for $9.00 saving $1.00	One subscription, as always, $5.00
3 subscriptions for 12.50 saving 2.50	Additional postage: Canada, 50¢;
4 subscriptions for 15.00 saving 5.00	Foreign, $1.00 per year.

SUBSCRIPTION BLANK

Name

Address

Name

Address

Name

Address

Name

Address

() Send gift cards with my name as donor to those checked. I enclose $

TO: THE AMERICAN MERCURY • 730 Fifth Avenue • NEW YORK

AM 12-27

WHY

THE BOOKMAN'S Circulation Has Doubled in Three Months

WHEN Burton Rascoe became the editor of THE BOOKMAN with the September number, the magazine's readers began a rapid increase which has now doubled the old circulation and is still continuing.

Why? First, because to discriminating readers Burton Rascoe's name is enough to guarantee a magazine of brilliance, vigor, authority, audacity — of solid worth and high enjoyment.

Second, because the first numbers of the new BOOKMAN have shown with increasing power that the expectations of his admirers were not going to be disappointed. . . . He has made THE BOOKMAN a minimum requirement for all who wish to follow the best in literature, criticism, and entertainment.

The Christmas BOOKMAN is a number worthy of the season and worthy of THE BOOKMAN'S greatest year. From the contents:

THE POSTHUMOUS WRITINGS OF GREAT AUTHORS

By Arthur Conan Doyle

A reasonable, lucid account of amazing, inexplicable events. The authors treated are Dickens, Jack London, and Oscar Wilde.

THE IRRITATING ARCHANGEL

By Thomas Beer

Bronson Alcott subjected to close scrutiny.

OUR LITTLE BROTHER WRITES A PLAY

By Robert C. Holliday

An uproarious story straight out of American literary life.

THE TRUE STORY OF SANTY CLAUS By John Macy

Did Santy Claus have red clothes and a white beard?

THE REAL BROADWAY

By Walter Winchell

The lowdown on the rackets of the main-stem.

BUSINESS IN THE AMERICAN NOVEL

By Charles R. Walker

How America neglects its major theme.

With poems, satires, sketches, reviews, illustrations, including work by Dorothy Parker, Wickham Steed, Edna Kenton, Arnold Bennett, Genevieve Taggard, J. B. Priestley.

Every Month in THE BOOKMAN

ROBERT BENCHLEY writes of plays, vaudeville, night-clubs, "and the more refined skating-rinks". . . . A survey of the amusement world by the ideal man for the job.

JOHN FARRAR, until recently editor of THE BOOKMAN, has his untrammelled say in a monthly department devoted to whatever happens to interest him.

THE BOOKMAN is growing so fast that it cannot keep the stands supplied.

xxii

THE BOOKMAN • 452 Fifth Avenue • NEW YORK.

Please enter my subscription to THE BOOKMAN, to start with the number.

I enclose ☐ $6 for two years ☐ $4 for one year.

Name

Address

IMPORTANT NOTE: The subscription price of THE BOOKMAN goes from $4 to $5 on January 1. By subscribing now you get the advantage of the old rate.

Place an order with your dealer, or use this blank to subscribe.

When you and Dumas go adventuring together

TO GO back to the Paris of the Cardinal with Dumas is to plunge headlong into plots and counterplots, leaping swords and sudden death. The moment he introduces you to D'Artagnan, the Gascon lad who saved a Queen and became, with those famous Three of the King's Musketeers, a symbol of invincibility and loyal courage, is to bid goodby to sleep until the last brilliant victory is won. Dumas, greatest of Romancers, is ready to take you adventuring in the days of restless swords.

You will get a decided thrill when you buy your first beautiful New Century Book. A thrill that will multiply as you choose your favorite books—one by one from the 165 titles, the great novels, famous plays, inspiring essays, and poetry, of the world's greatest writers. Printed from clear type, India paper, so compact that an 800-page book will fit easily in your pocket—and bound in full, genuine leather, tastefully decorated in gold—only $2.50 a volume. Just charming books to handle and to read.

You'll find appreciated gifts for a cherished friend in

NELSON NEW CENTURY LIBRARY

INDIA PAPER—CLEAR TYPE—LIMP LEATHER.

The book fits the pocket—the pricethe pocketbook—165 volumes $2.50 each.

At your booksellers

A valuable guide to your reading will be sent you free if you mail this coupon.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS NEW YORK

Please send me the valuable booklet, "The Reading Year" (printed on the famous Nelson India paper) which will help me plan my year's reading, and a complete list of the Nelson New Century Library. A.M.

Name

Street.....

City..... State.....

The LITERARY BAZAAR

AMERICANA

AMERICANA, FIRST EDITIONS, Government Publications, Law, Medicine, Science, Art, Literature, History, Biography, Travel, Religion, Philosophy. Back Numbers National Geographic, Mercury, Nature, Art Magazines. CONGRESSIONAL BOOKSHOP, 231 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington.

JEFFERSON DAVIS, Constitutionalist, His Letters, Papers and Speeches. Ten large volumes. By Dunbar Rowland, L.L.D., State Historian of Mississippi. Limited edition of 1,000 sets. Price $75 delivered. Write to THE AUTHOR, The Capitol, Jackson, Miss.

AUTOGRAPHS

AUTOGRAPHS OF CELEBRITIES bought and sold. Largest and most comprehensive selection in America of original letters, manuscripts and documents of world-famous authors. Send list of wants. New Catalogue just published for collectors. Mailed free upon request. THOMAS F. MADIGAN (established 1888), 48 West 49th Street, New York City.

BACK NUMBERS

AMERICAN MERCURY, Golden Book, Dial, Forum, International Studio, Harper's, Godey's, Graham's, Peterson's, Early illustrated weeklies and other early American magazines Bought and Sold. Lists solicited. THOMAS M. SALISBURY, 87 Fourth Ave., New York.

BOOK PLATES

BOOK PLATES, WOOD CUT STYLE in colors and copper plate style. $2 and $5 per hundred. Send roc for variety of samples. FRANKLIN BITTNER, 81-83 Irving Place, New York City.

BOOK PLATES, the Ideal Christmas Gift. Color, black and white; individual, distinctive designs. (Engraved plate gratis). Sketches and estimates furnished. Send for reproductions. S. PRITIKIN, 1254 S. Spaulding Ave., Chicago, Ill.

PROTECT YOUR BOOKS from Loss with Silver Individual Book Plates. Send for free album of beautiful sample designs and special offer. LOUIS J. SILVER, 6327 Glenwood Ave., 650 Silver Building, Chicago, Ill.

FIRST EDITIONS

WILL BUY: first editions American and English Authors; Autograph letters, manuscripts of noted authors, statesmen, etc.; Contemporary portraits, prints of Washington, Franklin, Lafayette, Lincoln. HARRY STONE, 24 East 58th St., N. Y. C.

PROGRESSIVE BOOKSHOP, 68 Red Lion St., High Holborn, London, Eng. Modern and First Edition Books. New Coterie Quarterly, advanced literature and art, 2/6, No. 6 now ready.

GOOD BOOKS, FIRST EDITIONS. Books by and concerning Walt Whitman. Monthly Catalogue on request. A. T. GOLDSMITH, 42 Lexington Ave., New York City.

FIRST EDITIONS WANTED of Cabell, Mencken, Hemingway, Dreiser, O'Neill. Catalog of modern first and de luxe editions on request. THE WALDEN BOOK SHOP, 410 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

FOREIGN BOOKS

VISIT THE FRENCH BOOKMAN, 202 West 60th Street, near Broadway, when in New York. French Books and Magazines exclusively. Large Selections, conveniently displayed and priced. Lists on request.

UNCOMMON LANGUAGES—Write me for books on and in Oriental, American Aboriginal and rarer European Languages. Paul R. Carr, 3923 Packard St., Long Island City, N. Y. Oriental Language and Philological Bookseller.

SCIENTIFIC AND ART publications in all Languages. Medical Books. Technical Books. General Literature. Agents for the famous Tauchnitz Collection of British Authors. Catalogues free. B. WESTERMANN CO., INC., 13 West 46th St., New York.

GENERAL

BOOK COLLECTING. In this intellectual and profitable pursuit, collectors may obtain reliable information on First Editions, Old Color-Plate Books. Finely printed Books, Ashendene, Doves, Kelmscott, and Vale Presses, Choice Bindings, etc., on application to FRANK HOLLINGS, 7 Great Turnstile, High Holborn, London, W. C. 2, Eng. Hollings catalogues aid collectors. Wants Lists receive careful attention. Catalogues post free to any part of world.

MARK TWAIN, complete, 26 volumes, limp leather, as new, price $65.—for $44.75: The Well At The World's End, by Wm. Morris, 2 vols., CHISWICK PRESS, London 1896, $12.25. NICHOLAS L. BROWN, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

NEW CATALOGUE first editions and private press books on request. Advise specialty. THE ARGUS, 434 S. Wabash, Chicago, Ill.

Kingdom of Books—Orcutt, Ltd., signed $16.00; Tristran and Isolte—Masefield, Ltd., signed $12.00; Dark Laughter—Anderson, Ltd., signed $11.00; Blake's Pencil Sketches—Nonesuch—$15.00. Catalogues issued. HERMES, 81 Nassau Street, New York City.

NEW CATALOGUE of unusual books in English, French and German mailed free. Catalogues of Americana, miscellaneous literature and First editions also issued. Schulte's Book Store, Inc., 80 Fourth Avenue, New York City (Tenth Street).

BUY AND SELL books thru The Literary Bazaar. It is not expensive to insert an announcement in this section and it brings results. THE AMERICAN MERCURY reaches about 90,000 people and all of them are interested in books. More dealers' and collectors' announcements are found in THE AMERICAN MERCURY than in any other general magazine. "There's a reason." Try it yourself and find out. A seven line announcement costs $7, and only $5 if you use every month for a year. For further information write Dept. L. B. THE AMERICAN MERCURY, 730 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

OUT OF PRINT

OUT OF PRINT BOOKS and First Editions Supplied. We either have or can get the book you want. Let us serve you. Kalki Library Service, Dept. M. 3 Cedar St., New York City.

PROFESSIONAL SERVICES

MATHILDE WEIL, Literary Adviser. Books, short stories, articles and verse criticized and marketed; special department for plays and motion pictures. THE WRITERS' WORKSHOP, INC., 135 East Fifty-eighth Street, New York.

PLAYS, NOVELS, SHORT-STORY MSS. WANTED. Out-of-town work solicited. Complete brokerage service to authors. I criticize and market MSS. Also typing expertly done. Rates reasonable. HELEN BARTEL, 14 West 48th Street, New York. Bryant 1527.

ARTHUR E. SCOTT, Authors' Agent and Editorial Critic. Former Editor Top-Notch Magazine. Expert criticism, revision, and marketing of manuscripts. Real editorial assistance given. Room 6, 74 Irving Place, New York.

AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS—Manuscripts edited, revised, styled, indexes made; proofs read by expert editors now serving New York publishing houses. Agency Service for out of town customers, Editorial Service Bureau, MINNIE HOOVER LINTON, Dir., Caledonia 3999. 210 Madison Avenue, N. Y.

RARE BOOKS

THAT BOOK YOU WANT.—Foyles can supply it, any conceivable subject. Over 1,250,000 vols. second-hand and new in stock, including an immense number out-of-print, Rare, First Editions, and Sets of Authors. Twenty departmental catalogues. Outline requirements and interests; suitable catalogues will then be sent free. Books on approval. FOYLES, 119-125 Charing Cross Road, London, England.

MEREDITH JANVIER, Rare Books, First Editions, Art, Crime, Fables, Jests, Anecdotes, Trials, Mencken, Napoleon, Pirates, Dime Novels, etc. Catalog free. Aid given Collectors. 14 W. Hamilton Street, Baltimore, Md.

RARE MODERN FIRST EDITIONS. Catalogues gratis from BERTRAM ROTA, (removed to) 76a Davies Street, Oxford Street, London W. 1.

MESSRS. ELLIS have for sale an unequalled collection of English Armorial Bookbindings. Particulars on application to 29 New Bond St., London W. 1, England.

DULAU & CO. LTD. (Est. 1792), announce their removal to 32 Old Bond Street, London W. 1. Fine books of all periods. Catalogues free on request.

A GRABHORN PRESS ITEM: Whispers and Chants, Poems by Jake Zeitlin—Introduction by Carl Sandburg. A collection of remarkable poems, printed by Grabhorn for the LANTERN PRESS, GELBER, LILIENTHAL, INC., 336 Sutter St., San Francisco, Calif.

SHORT STORY WRITING

PARTICULARS of Dr. Esenwein's famous forty-lesson course in Short-Story Writing and sample copy of the Writer's Monthly, free. Write today. THE HOME CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL, Dept. 91, Springfield, Mass.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

BOOK PLATES DESIGNED & ETCHED

Designs from $25 to $100. Copper etched plate $25.
Only individual orders accepted.
Sketches submitted on all commissions.

RALPH FLETCHER SEYMOUR, Designer
Fine Arts Building, 410 South Michigan Ave., CHICAGO, Ill.

The TRUTH SEEKER

National Freethought
Weekly. Est. 1873.
G. E. Macdonald, Edr.

Three mos. Trial, $1. Sample free.
BOOKS: Voltaire, Paine, Ingersoll. Catalog free.
TRUTH SEEKER CO. 49 Vesey Street, New York

Books for Christmas

The fun of giving with none of the drudgery. Book gifts gayly wrapped in imported papers sent direct to your friends anywhere post free. Send for illustrated
Christmas catalog.

THE POST BOX BOOK SERVICE, Inc.
15 West 44th Street New York City

FIRST EDITIONS

of
AMERICAN
and

ENGLISH AUTHORS

Autographed Letters,
Manuscripts of Noted People, Association Items.

Catalogues On Request

HARRY STONE 24 E. 58th St., N.Y.C.
Tel. Plaza 2298

BOOKS New Catalogues

- No. 217. Miscellaneous Literature.
Modern First Editions. Folk Lore etc.
- No. 218. Scientific (Astronomy, Chemistry, Mathematics, Physics etc.).
- No. 219. Remainders (New Books Reduced in Price).

Copies of above Catalogues will be sent post free on application.

JAMES THIN, Bookseller
54, 55 & 56 South Bridge, Edinburgh, Scotland

OLD AND RARE BOOKS FIRST EDITIONS

Call or Send for New Catalogue

J. P. HENNESSEY
23 East 55th Street New York, N. Y.
PLAZA 5978

Book Notes The literary periodical about which everyone is talking.
ILLUSTRATED Published bi-monthly. Send $1.00 to the publisher for a year's subscription.
EDWIN VALENTINE MITCHELL, INC.
HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT

FALL LIST ("Neuigkeiten Verzeichnis") ready for mailing!

GERMAN BOOKS

Also Christmas Catalogue with several thousand standard titles of current and classic books.

BEYER'S 6 East 29th Street
NEW YORK CITY

FIRST EDITIONS, RARE BOOKS, AUTOGRAPHS MANUSCRIPTS

[Catalogues Issued]

JAMES F. DRAKE, Inc.
14 W. 40 St., N. Y. C.

A SPECIAL OPPORTUNITY TO ALL BOOKLOVERS

New and Important Remainders

Including English and European History and Biography, Natural Science, Philosophy and Theology, General Prose, Literature, Poetry, Travel and Sport, and Works of Reference.

All books are in perfect condition, as issued, and offered,
so long as the stocks last, at exceptionally low prices.
A new catalogue of 116 pages will be posted gratis on application.

Orders may be sent through any bookseller or direct to

JOHN GRANT
Wholesale Bookseller
31, George IV. Bdge., EDINBURGH, SCOTLAND

A Secluded, Quiet Reading Room where booklovers can browse in a congenial atmosphere in our

NEW FIFTH AVENUE STORE

Bringing the English shop idea to New York.
an innovation!

BOOKS: OLD, RARE and NEW

In all departments of Art, Science, and Literature.
Out-of-Print books supplied. New Catalogue ready.
Libraries purchased. New Books sent post free.

DAUBER and PINE BOOK SHOPS, Inc.
66 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK
Phone Chelsea 5670 Open Evenings

Roads To Greater

Understanding—

TO FRANKNESS IN MODERN MARRIAGE
The Companionate Marriage
by Judge Ben B. Lindsey and Wainwright Evans
Authors of THE REVOLT of MODERN YOUTH

"I do not know who is today doing better work as a moralist. You are saying about marriage exactly the same things as Jesus said about the Sabbath—that marriage is made for man and not man for marriage."—Havelock Ellis.
Large 12 mo. $3.00

TO a TRUE BIOGRAPHY of OUR NATION AMERICA
by HENDRIK VAN LOON
Author of THE STORY OF MANKIND
With more than 100 illustrations in color and line by the author

"A noble and a wise book, thought-provoking, entertaining. He gives you a seat—a front seat—on the best cloud to watch a nation go by."
—Walter Yust, Phila. Public Ledger.
2nd large edition. Octavo. $5.00

TO KNOW THE ETERNALLY HUMAN IN POLITICS
"BOSS" TWEED [The Story of a Grim Generation]
by DENIS TILDEN LYNCH

"A distinct contribution to the knowledge of days that have passed. It is a highly exciting book."
—N. Y. Herald Tribune. 3rd large edition. Illustrated. Octavo. $4.00

TO UNDERSTANDING OF HUMAN GREATNESS
Napoleon
THE MAN OF DESTINY
by EMIL LUDWIG
116TH THOUSAND

"Emil Ludwig's biography of Napoleon is the best that has been written to date."
—Dr. Joseph Collins, N. Y. Eve. Post.
Octavo. 732 pages. 16 full-page plates. $3.00

BONI & LIVERIGHT,

GOOD BOOKS

Publishers, N. Y.

MY LIFE Isadora Duncan

Isadora Duncan played a great part in the life of our time. Constantly working for the advancement of new ideas in art and life, her activities carried her through extraordinary adventures and events. Her book was completed shortly before her tragic death. Illustrated, octavo, $5.00.

The Letters of GERTRUDE BELL of Arabia

"And now that her letters have been gathered together, it is pleasant to chronicle that the reality as portrayed by her pen is even more fascinating than the legendary individual conjured up by hearsay. The Gertrude Bell of the letters is vivid and living, in love with life and with everything alive—warm-blooded, keen, pulsating, delightful. Filled with the thrill of adventure for she was always in quest of it and when she found it she knew how to write about it in such a way as to make what she was going through in out-of-the-way corners of the world, vivid and enthralling to readers."—N. Y. Times. 2 vols., illustrated, boxed, $10.00.

The Story of THE AMERICAN INDIAN by Paul Radin

In the last few years we have learned more about the American Indian in North and South America than was ever known before. Archeologists have dug up the strange and mighty empires and civilizations that he built up; ethnologists have traced his origins, anthropologists have delved into his beliefs and ideas of life. Now his whole story is told. Dr. Radin is one of the most eminent living authorities on the American Indian. Illustrated with a marvelous collection of photographs. Octavo. $5.00.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

Fiction's Roads

To Understanding—

The GREAT BEAR

by Lester Cohen
Author of SWEEPINGS

A portrait of an egotist, a conqueror in love and a conqueror in the never-ending battle of business. SWEEPINGS, the author's previous novel, was hailed as an American masterpiece. 2nd large edition. $2.50.

WORLD'S' ENDS

by JACOB WASSERMANN
Author of WEDLOCK,
THE WORLD'S ILLUSION, etc.

The crises in five lives, told with the magnificent breadth of understanding that has established the author of THE WORLD'S ILLUSION and WEDLOCK among the great in our time. $2.50.

A YANKEE PASSIONAL

by Samuel Ornitz
Author of
HAUNCH, PAUNCH and JOWL

The writer who gave us that colorful story of New York's East Side, HAUNCH, PAUNCH and JOWL, gives us a vivid, racy novel of the crank era in America. $2.50.

Lazy Isle

By George F. Hummel
Author of AFTER ALL, SUBSOIL, EVELYN GRAINGER, etc.

A sensuous, delightful story of Capri, and an American who falls under its spell, the ancient spell of Circe and Venus. $2.50.

BONI & LIVERIGHT,

GOOD BOOKS

Publishers, N. Y.

THE BOOK FOR— The Lover of Music or Americana

THE SONGS OF PAUL DRESSER

With An Introduction by
THEODORE DREISER

The words and music of the choicest songs of the writer of On the Banks of the Wabash. Illustrated with stereopticon slides of the period.

The Lover of Poetry and of Burns' Poems Especially

The Kilmarnock Edition of the POEMS OF
ROBERT BURNS

An exact facsimile, duplicating even the texture of the paper of the historic first edition. $2.50.

The Lover of Exotic Travel Stories

TRAVELLERS' TALES
A Book of Marvels

The most marvelous animals, birds, monsters, places, men and tales brought back by the world's travelers. Beautifully illustrated. $3.50.

The Lover of Art TREES AT NIGHT

by ART YOUNG

A portfolio of remarkable drawings: playful, yet weird, in which trees dramatize the triumphs, ecstasies and tragedies of life.

Octavo. $3.00.

Lazarus Laughed

by EUGENE O'NEILL

Perhaps the most astonishingly imaginative play by O'Neill; the account of what Lazarus, risen from the dead, saw on earth and the mystery of the heavenly laughter that he brought with him to the living. Uniform with the Collected Edition of the Plays of O'Neill. $2.50. Limited, signed edition, 750 copies, $10.00.

SAMPLES A Collection of Short Stories

"Probably the year's most intelligent selection of short stories." Chicago News.

"Editors and publishers are to be congratulated upon the notable company of writers whose services they have enlisted. The table of contents reads like a roll-call of celebrities." N. Y. Eve. Sun. $2.50

EPOCH The Life of STEELE MACKAYE

This is the life work of Percy MacKaye, a beautiful memorial to his father and his generation. Steele MacKaye won greatness as an actor, dramatist and inventor. He played so great a part in the major movements of his times that the story of his career is a history of his times. A beautiful octavo set of books, with 396 reproductions from rare originals, 2 vols. boxed, $10.00.

Much Loved Books

by JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT

A fascinating book about books—a pithy account of more than 60 of the world's masterpieces—not only giving the gist of each but telling the often curious story of the book's career. $3.50.

The BLACK AND GOLD LIBRARY

No finer series of books to give to cultivated people has ever been published. Each volume is a masterpiece with a unique essence; each is beautifully printed and bound; each is unavailable in any other library format except at a distinctly greater price.

New Volumes

THE SATYRICON OF PETRONIUS ARBITER

The great classic of Roman decadence. Based on the famous W. C. Firebaugh translation, now unavailable.

THE CONFESSIONS OF ST. AUGUSTINE

The Pilkington version, the most exhaustive and authoritative known.

THE GOLDEN ASS OF APULEIUS

The Adlington version amplified from the more complete text of Thomas Taylor.

CONTEMPORARIES OF MARCO POLO

Travel records of mediaeval voyagers, extraordinary records usually difficult to obtain.

Already Published

The Travels of Marco Polo; Tristram Shandy; A Sentimental Journey and Other Pieces by Laurence Sterne; Il Pentamerone; The Dialogues of Plato; The Physiology of Taste; The Complete Poems of Villon.

Each Octavo $3.50

CHECK LIST of NEW BOOKS

THE SCIENCES

SEX AND REPRESSION IN SAVAGE SOCIETY.

By Bronislaw Malinowski. Harcourt, Brace & Company
$3.50 8½ x 5½; 285 pp. New York

There is some unevenness in this interesting and important work. When he wrote the first part Dr. Malinowski was still under the domination of Freudian ideas; he has now cast most of them off. But that unevenness does not destroy the value of his investigation. His subject is the origin of ideas, and especially of cultural ideas, in primitive man, and to its elucidation he brings an immense mass of first-hand knowledge and a profound understanding of the savage mind. The volume belongs to the International Library of Psychology, Philosophy and Scientific Method, edited by C. K. Ogden.

SCIENCE: LEADING AND MISLEADING.

By Arthur Lynch. E. P. Dutton & Company
$3 7¾ x 4¾; 376 pp. New York

Col. Lynch is by no means hostile to the scientific point of view; on the contrary, he favors it. But he is convinced that even the greatest scientists are fallible like the rest of us, and he here attempts to prove it by rehearsing grimly a long list of their errors. His moral is that scientific "truths," even when they have won universal acceptance, had better be accepted with caution.

DREAMS.

By Percy G. Stiles. The Harvard University Press
$1.50 7½ x 5; 80 pp. Cambridge, Mass.

Dr. Stiles, who is a physiologist, here recounts some of the dreams he has had during the past thirty years (with drawings to illustrate them), and then attempts a discussion of the psychology of the dream state. His conclusions, in the main, agree with those of Havelock Ellis. His little book contributes little that is new to knowledge of the subject, but it is interesting throughout, and sometimes very amusing. His drawings are crude, but they really illustrate.

FURTHER CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE THEORY AND TECHNIQUE OF PSYCHOANALYSIS.

By Sándor Ferenczi. Boni & Liveright
$5 9¼ x 6; 461 pp. New York

A collection of Dr. Ferenczi's scattered papers, running from 1908 to 1923. Many of them are very brief notes, and there is nothing of much novelty in any of them. The author is one of the most indefatigable writers on psychoanalysis: the bibliography at the end of the book lists no less than 173 papers. The present volume was compiled by Dr. John Rickman, an English disciple, and the translation was made by Jane Isabel Suttie, Cecil M. Baine, Olive Edmonds, Edward Glover and the editor.

xxviii

HEREDITY AND HUMAN AFFAIRS.

By Edward M. East. Charles Scribner's Sons
$3.50 8¾ x 6; 325 pp. New York

Dr. East, who is professor of experimental plant morphology at Harvard, believes firmly that the human stock may be improved by devices not unlike those that have been employed with success in dealing with animals, but he is by no means a eugenicist of the familiar romantic sort. His book thus presents a moderate view of the matter, and much of its interest and value lie in that fact. What he has to say about such things as racial traits, immigration, and the problems presented by the moron and criminal is sound in information and reasonable in thesis. His book has an excellent index, but lacks a bibliography.

THE A B C OF PSYCHOLOGY.

By Vance Randolph. The Vanguard Press
50 cents 7¼ x 4½; 137 pp. New York

This book is clearly written, and contains far more information than many bulkier volumes. But it suffers greatly from the complete lack of illustrations, especially in the chapter on the nervous system, which is quite unintelligible without them.

THE HUMAN HABITAT.

By Ellsworth Huntington. The D. Van Nostrand Company
$3 8¾ x 5½; 293 pp. New York

In this excellent book Dr. Huntington, who is a research associate in geography at Yale, attempts a brief but comprehensive account of the geographical factors that bear upon the life of man. His exposition is admirably succinct and clear, and his examples in point are always apposite and interesting. At the end he applies the principles that he has laid down to the solution of two typical problems—that lying in the peculiar social and economic conditions observed in the Black Belt of Alabama, and that presented by the striking contrasts between the prosperity of two adjoining Virginia counties, Albemarle and Buckingham. The book has many illustrations, but some of them scarcely illustrate. It has a good index, but no bibliography. It belongs to the Library of Modern Sciences, edited by Edwin E. Slosson, M. Luckiesh and H. E. Howe.

Continued on page xxx

VIKING

BOOKS

Chosen by
THE LITERARY GUILD OF AMERICA
as its November Book

Selecting Committee
CARL VAN DOREN
ELINOR WYLIE
HENDRIK VAN LOON
GLENN FRANK
ZONA GALE
JOSEPH KRUTCH

A SHORT HISTORY OF WOMEN

by JOHN LANGDON-DAVIES

Author of THE NEW AGE OF FAITH

Primitive woman possessed a mysterious force, known as mana. She was feared for her powers of harm and exalted for her power of fertility. See pages 79-145.

In ancient Athens women were slaves in a slave state. Men's worship of reason lessened their worship of women as goddesses of fertility. See pages 158-168.

THIS book, a study of women in every phase and sphere of life through the ages, belongs to the new type of literature which has been called "The Humanization of Knowledge." Women, since primitive times, have been the victims of taboos handed down from generation to generation. As a result of these taboos and superstitions women have become an eternal enigma to man. John Langdon-Davies, eminent scientist and writer, has constructed a plain road through this wilderness of distortions. He has shown why we behave like men and women.

BEGINNING with the biology of sex the book presents an absorbing parade of scientific facts ending with the emergence of the woman of tomorrow. $3.

In Queen Elizabeth's reign there came a golden period of emancipation for women, but it was shortly ousted by puritanism and the licentious court of Charles II. See pages 310-315.

What will the woman of the future be like? What will become of the man of the future? Read the prophecy in this book. See pages 360-382.

THE VIKING PRESS
PUBLISHERS

30 IRVING PLACE
NEW YORK

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

CHECK LIST OF NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xxviii

THE PROBLEM OF LAY-ANALYSES.

By Sigmund Freud.

$2.50

7½ x 5; 316 pp.

Brentano's

New York

Freud argues in this tract that the practice of psychoanalysis by laymen of proper equipment and discretion should be permitted—that quacks are just as apt to appear within the fold of medical men as outside. The question is a live one in Austria, where the medical practise laws are very strict. In the United States, as in Germany, anyone is free to practice psychoanalysis. Along with the principal essay there appears in the volume an autobiographical study, first published in "Die Medizin der Gegenwart in Selbstdarstellungen," in 1925. There is also an introduction by Dr. S. Ferenczi, Freud's chief Hungarian disciple, in which it is argued that Freud does not attach as much importance to purely sexual matters as is commonly assumed.

THE STANDARDIZATION OF ERROR.

By Vilhelmur Stefansson. W. W. Norton & Company

$1

6½ x 4¼; 83 pp.

New York

An amusing essay upon the tendency of human beings to embrace and cherish what is not true. It is full of instructive examples. Unfortunately, Dr. Stefansson comes close to falling into the bog that he warns against. On page 47, though he does not state it as a fact, he makes use of the hypothesis that the bathtub was not invented until 1842, and that several States passed laws forbidding its use. This is precisely as true as the ancient belief, still held almost universally in Mississippi, that a horse-hair put into a bottle of water will turn into a snake. But his book is capital reading.

HISTORY

WAH-TO-YAH AND THE TAOS TRAIL.

By Lewis H. Garrard. The Harlow Publishing Company

$1.50

6½ x 4; 320 pp. Oklahoma City, Okla.

Garrard was born in 1829 and made the trip from Westport (now Kansas City) to Taos in 1846 and 1847. His narrative, first published in Cincinnati in 1850, has been out of print for many years. It ranks with Parkman's "Oregon Trail" as a classic of the old West. In this edition it is admirably edited for the use of Western schoolboys by Professor W. S. Campbell, of the University of Oklahoma. Unfortunately, the reprint is defaced by a number of bad typographical errors, and the press-work might have been much better.

xxx

THE FREEDMEN'S SAVINGS BANK.

By Walter L. Fleming.

$2

The University of North Carolina Press
Chapel Hill, N. C.

8½ x 5¼; 170 pp.

The Freedmen's Savings Bank forms one of the most tragic chapters in the history of Afroamerica. It was founded in 1865 in Washington, with the purpose of helping the freed slaves in their new environment. Before long it developed thirty-four branches, extending from New Orleans to Philadelphia, and money flowed into its coffers by the millions. Growing rich, it built a tremendous and gaudy central office in the capital, with the swellest furnishings, and then, due mainly to dishonesty on the part of some of its officials, it collapsed on June 28, 1874, with nearly three millions owing to depositors, and practically nothing in ready assets. There have been several efforts to have the Federal government make good the loss, since it took a direct interest in the enterprise, but they have all been in vain. Dr. Fleming is professor of history at Vanderbilt, and his discussion of the subject is comprehensive and thoroughly documented.

THE PLAGUE IN SHAKESPEARE'S LONDON.

By F. P. Wilson.

$4.25

The Oxford University Press
New York

9 x 5¾; 228 pp.

The plagues dealt with in this book are those of 1603, 1603-1624, and 1625. Mr. Wilson discusses minutely their extent, probable causes, and contemporary "cures."

THE LEGACY OF ISRAEL.

Edited by Edwyn Bevan and Charles Singer.

$4

The Oxford University Press

7¾ x 5¾; 551 pp.

New York

This is a symposium on the contributions of Israel to world civilization. Those participating are leading English and American scholars. The nature of their essays is indicated by the chapter titles: "The Debt of Christianity to Judaism," "The Influence of Judaism on Islam," "The Jewish Factor in Medieval Thought," "The Influence of Judaism on Western Law," "The Influence of the Old Testament on Puritanism," "The Influence of the Bible on European Languages," and "The Legacy in Modern Literature."

TURNPIKES AND DIRT ROADS.

By Leighton Parks.

$3

Charles Scribner's Sons

9 x 6; 334 pp.

New York

A series of sketches, mainly autobiographical, of

Continued on page xxxii

NORTON BOOKS

The most virile of the European thinkers of our generation — Will Durant

BERTRAND RUSSELL'S "PHILOSOPHY"

Bertrand Russell is hailed everywhere as one of the most eminent world philosophers. In this new book he lays before the reader the first presentation of philosophy in terms of modern science with especial relation to the new physics and the new psychology. The book shows the sort of world in which we really live and how it differs from the world in which we seem to live. $3.00

THE STORY OF MUSIC

By Paul Bekker

*Author of
"Beethoven," etc.*

Generally acclaimed the year's great book on music for the general reader.
Illustrated. $3.50

ABOUT OURSELVES

By H. A. Overstreet

*Author of
"Influencing Human Behavior"*

Here is a psychology for all normal people. It is written out of the conviction that we "normals" need to know a good deal more about ourselves than we ordinarily do. Professor Overstreet reveals ourselves to ourselves in the light of knowledge gained through fifty years of psychological research. $3.00

THE STORY OF ARCHITECTURE IN AMERICA

By Thomas E. Tallmadge

Fellow of the American Institute of Architects

The first history of American architecture and the first biography of American architects.
Beautifully illustrated.
$3.50

THE NEW SCIENCE SERIES

Edited by C. K. Ogden

CULTURE—The Diffusion Controversy

By *G. Elliott Smith,
Bronislaw Malinowski,
Herbert J. Spinden,
Alexander Goldenweiser*

Is Culture contagious? Read what the world's leading anthropologists say.

ECONOMICS AND HUMAN BEHAVIOR

By P. Sargant Florence

"Just and penetrating," says
Stuart Chase, author of "Your Money's Worth."

THE STANDARDI- ZATION OF ERROR

By Vilhjalmur Stefansson

Stefansson leaves the role of explorer to urge new fundamentals of education.

Price $1.00 each

ARTISTIC IDEALS

By Daniel Gregory Mason

A new edition of this popular work, boxed, suitable for gift purposes. $2.50

THE MEANING OF A LIBERAL EDUCATION

By Everett Dean Martin

Author of "Psychology," etc.

A best seller in its second year.
The book that helps one to determine what an educated person really is: "Wise and illuminating," says John Erskine.
$3.00

Write for complete catalog of
NORTON BOOKS

The People's Institute Lectures-in-print

BEHAVIORISM

By John B. Watson

"What Darwin did for natural history Watson has done for human behavior."—Dr. George A. Dorsey.

INFLUENCING HUMAN BEHAVIOR

By H. A. Overstreet

"Professor Overstreet is endowed with the ability to relate philosophical thoughts to actual human problems."—John Dewey.

PSYCHOLOGY

By Everett Dean Martin

"A beautiful, lucid exposition of the essential facts of psychology."—H. L. Mencken

Price $3.00 each

W. W. NORTON & CO. INC. 70 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK

CHECK LIST OF NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xxx

life in the South prior to and during the Civil War. They are all very feeble, and of little historical value or literary merit.

OUR TIMES: America Finding Herself.

By Mark Sullivan.

Charles Scribner's Sons

$5

9 x 6; 668 pp.

New York

The first volume of this intimate history, "The Turn of the Century," was published rather more than a year ago. Mr. Sullivan devotes the first half of the present volume to a "survey of the average American's stock of ideas, so far as those ideas came to him through his early education." Much space is devoted to the public schools of the 80's, and to the school-books used in them. The author, as in his first volume, has unearthed an immense mass of interesting and amusing material, and it is presented very effectively, with many illustrations. The second half of the book covers the political and social history of the United States between 1900 and 1905—the gaudy Roosevelt era. There is an especially good chapter on the long fight for pure food laws.

RELIGION

THE NEW REFORMATION: From Physical to Spiritual Realities.

By Michael Pupin.

Charles Scribner's Sons

$2.50

8 x 5 3/8; 273 pp.

New York

After a chapter on scientific method and four on the gradual development of the fundamental theories of physics, Dr. Pupin proceeds to argue that "our Christian faith sees in the life and teaching of Christ the highest spiritual reality which our belief in God, the fountainhead of all spiritual realities, planted in the soul of man." What this "highest spiritual reality" may be he does not explain. He is, indeed, somewhat vague about the whole matter, as physicists always are (consider the cases of Millikan, Lodge, Crookes, etc.) when they deal with religious concepts. Dr. Pupin thinks it is improbable that anything "resembling this spiritual world exists also in the consciousness of lower animals," for the reason that "man worships, animals do not."

GOD AND PAIN.

By George Stewart

The George H. Doran Company

$1.35

7 1/2 x 5; 130 pp.

New York

A vague and somewhat mushy discussion of the problem of evil. The author resorts to poets for his materials, and is apparently unfamiliar with the vast literature on the subject by professional theologians. Nevertheless, it will make a useful book for clergymen in search of matter for reassuring sermons.

xxxii

THE RADIANT STORY OF JESUS.

By Alphonse Séché.

The Century Company

$3.50

8 1/8 x 5 1/2; 381 pp.

New York

M. Séché starts off with the astounding theory (at least to English-speaking persons) that the four Gospels are "redundant" and that reading them is "tiresome." Obviously, he suffers, as a Frenchman, from the fact that there has never been a decent translation of the Bible into French. In English there is no such difficulty: the Authorized Version is one of the glories of the language. Thus M. Séché's laborious effort to put the Four Gospels (with some help from the Apocrypha) into a continuous narrative goes for naught: the original is much better. He attempts no revision of that original, but accepts all its statements as fact. He even puts down unblushingly the genealogy of Jesus in Matthew 1. The translation into English is by Helen Davenport Gibbons.

THE FORGOTTEN BOOKS OF EDEN.

Edited by Rutherford H. Platt, Jr.

Alpha House

$2.95

8 3/8 x 5 3/4; 262 pp.

New York

A collection of apocryphal and pseudoeptigraphical writing, hitherto unobtainable in a single volume at a moderate price. It includes the first and second books of Adam and Eve, the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, the fourth book of Maccabees, and the Psalms and Odes of Solomon. The last-named, known only in a Syriac text, was discovered so recently as 1909 by J. Rendel Harris, a Cambridge scholar. There is a preface to the volume by Dr. William N. Guthrie, rector of St. Mark's in the Bouwerie, New York.

BIOGRAPHY

PORTRAITS IN COLOR.

By Mary White Ovington.

The Viking Press

$2

8 x 5 1/2; 241 pp.

New York

Twenty sympathetic sketches of Negro men and women, all of them living. Those dealt with are James Weldon Johnson, Marcus Garvey, Max Yergan, Mordecai W. Johnson, Lucy Laney, Robert Russa Moton, W. E. Burghardt DuBois, Scipio Africanus Jones, Walter White, Robert S. Abbott, Maggie Lena Walker, Eugene Kinckle Jones, Louis Tompkins Wright, Ernest Everett Just, George Washington Carver, Janie Porter Barrett, Langston Hughes, Paul Robeson, Meta Vaux Warrick Fuller, and Roland Hayes. "I have written of no one," says the author, "whom I have not met and seen at work."

ALFRED E. SMITH: A Critical Study.

By Henry F. Pringle.

Macy-Masius

$3

9 x 5 3/8; 402 pp.

New York

This is by no means a campaign biography, but an

Continued on page xxxiv

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

An Outstanding Book of the Year—

“A new kind of history, one that weaves into its fabric the stuff of every-day life.”

OUR TIMES

America Finding Herself

by

Mark Sullivan

THE picture of American life from 1904 to 1908—with excursions into years beyond those limits—is here spread before the reader in all its amazing diversity. Recreated by Mr. Sullivan from personalities, events, and customs in the fascinating manner that made “The Turn of the Century”—first volume of “Our Times”—a best seller for more than a year, this new volume continues the history and presents in itself a complete picture of these eventful years. Roosevelt, Morgan, Harriman, Hill, and Rockefeller emerge with new emphasis from the pages; Trusts, Steel, Oil, Big Business, First Successes in Flying, Fashions, Books, and Songs are described and recalled with dramatic vividness and humor. The illustrations are an important feature of the book. Hundreds of contemporary cartoons, photographs, and sketches join with the brilliant text to make “America Finding Herself” one of the most important books of the year.

At all Bookstores

WITH 204 ILLUSTRATIONS. $5.00

Charles Scribner's Sons, 597 Fifth Avenue, New York

xxxiii

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

RANDOM HOUSE

Devoted to the creation and distribution of books of typographic interest

RANDOM HOUSE IS THE AMERICAN DISTRIBUTOR

FOR THE LIMITED EDITIONS OF

The NONESUCH
PRESS

&
The GOLDEN COCKEREL
PRESS

A prospectus of the proposed publications for the season of 1927-28 will be sent gladly upon request. Inasmuch as many of the publications are already oversubscribed, it is suggested that you select the books you desire before they are quoted at advanced prices.

NEW YORK · RANDOM HOUSE · 20 E 57 ST

xxxiv

Check List of NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xxxii

attempt at an accurate and impartial estimate of the Governor of New York. Mr. Pringle, it is obvious, admires him, but in that admiration there is no blind adulation. The book is full of unfamiliar facts, and is very entertainingly written.

BOSS TWEED: The Story of a Grim Generation.

By Denis Tilden Lynch.

Boni & Liveright

$4 8½ x 5¾; 433 pp.

New York

This is more than a biography of Tweed: it is a careful and well-informed history of that era of appalling corruption which straddled the Civil War. All the great figures of the time move through the chronicle. It makes instructive and fascinating reading.

TRANSITION: A Sentimental Story of One Mind and One Era.

By Will Durant.

Simon & Schuster

$3 7½ x 5¾; 352 pp.

New York

Born in Massachusetts, of French Canadian parents, Dr. Durant started out in life as a pious Catholic, took to Darwinism and the service of the New York Journal, reverted to his ancestral faith and began studying for the priesthood, backslid again and was excommunicated, and finally devoted himself to philosophical studies, teaching and journalism. A year or so ago his "Story of Philosophy" made a great success, and now he tells the story of his life. It is told very well, and it is intrinsically very interesting.

REMINISCENCES OF ADVENTURE AND SERVICE.

By A. W. Greely.

Charles Scribner's Sons

$3.50 8¾ x 6; 356 pp.

New York

General Greely was born in Massachusetts in 1844, the son of white Nordic Protestant parents. He enlisted as a private in the Union Army at the beginning of the Civil War, and thereafter rose gradually through the ranks to the dignity of major-general. He knew nearly all the Union generals, from Grant down, and has been a personal friend of all the Presidents since Johnson. Beside, he has known lots of counts, dukes and barons of foreign parts, and has been honored with hundreds of public dinners. In this book he opens up, and lets the people of the country know what has been going on in his mind throughout all these years. About the Civil War he has nothing of importance to say. He frequently talked to Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and others high in command, but apparently they made no impression on him. Of the long line of Presidents, he remembers only how kind their wives were to him. He remembers especially that he was toast-master at a meeting of distinguished Unitarians some years ago, and that he introduced the then President

Continued on page xxxvi

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

A SELECTED LIST OF DUTTON BOOKS which have been well reviewed, which are among the best sellers, which are being discussed everywhere.

ZELDA MARSH

By Charles Norris

The story of a girl who possesses the most dangerous of gifts. $2.50

SPLendor

By Ben Ames Williams

The brilliant happenings of the 19th century form the background for an enticing love story. $2.50

FACE VALUE

By J. L. Campbell

"An astounding tale for chaste Anglo-Saxon consumption." The New Yorker. $2.50

ROARING BONES

By Prince William of Sweden

Stirring Stories of the "Student Prince's" adventures in Africa. Exciting? $2.50

IT IS BETTER TO TELL

Powerful, gripping—this problem of illegitimacy. $2.50

GIRLS WHO DID

By Helen Ferris and Virginia Moore

Anne Carroll Moore, in The Herald Tribune, says: "This book fills a need." $2.50

MEMOIRS OF A POOR RELATION

By Marietta M. Andrews

A charming autobiography presenting intimate pictures of well-known families of the Civil War period. $5.00

THE PERFECT COURTIER

COUNT BALDASSARE CASTIGLIONE
His life and letters (1478-1529)

By Julia Cartwright

Count Baldassare has been immortalized by Mrs. Cartwright's brilliant biography. 2 Vols. $10.00

MODES AND MANNERS OF THE 19th CENTURY

By Max Von Bohem and Dr. Oscar Fischel

Each volume contains 36 color plates and 200 other illustrations. Vols. I-IV
Per Vol. $5.00

SALOME

By Oscar Wilde

Inventions by JOHN VASSOS
In the voluptuous drama of "Salome" John Vassos has found a subject suitable for his exotic illustrations.

The Smart Gift Book
Popular Ed. $3.50
Limited Ed. $10.00

NOW WE ARE SIX

By A. A. Milne

Illustrated by E. H. SHEPARD
More charming and whimsical verse by the author of "When We Were Very Young" $2.00

OASIS AND SIMOON

By Ferdinand Ossendowski

A travel book of the Orient which contains a passionate love story. $3.00

LIFE AND LAUGHTER MIDST THE CANNIBALS

By Clifford Collinson

A gleeful travel book into a sun-drenched world $5.00

SKETCHES ON THE OLD ROAD THROUGH FRANCE TO FLORENCE

By A. H. Murray

In the company of Henry Nevinson and Montgomery Carmichael, this delightful ramble makes more delightful reading. $5.00

Our Fall Catalogue will intrigue.

E. P. DUTTON & COMPANY

Announcement

The first two books published by The Bowling Green Press are fine examples of modern book production.

Now Ready

The Making of an Immortal. By George Moore. The edition consists of 1240 numbered copies, signed by the author. Designed by James Hendrickson and printed by William Edwin Rudge, Inc. Price $15.00.

The Silver Cat and Other Poems. By Humbert Wolfe. The edition consists of 780 copies. Designed by Bruce Rogers and printed by William Edwin Rudge, Inc. Price $10.00.

One-half of each edition is reserved for England.

The publishers will be pleased to send a prospectus of forthcoming titles.

THE BOWLING GREEN PRESS

475 Fifth Avenue
New York

xxxvi

Check List of NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xxxiv

Taft. During the Boston police strike he volunteered his services as a cop, and was commended by the State Legislature.

LETTERS OF RICHARD WAGNER.

Edited by Wilhelm Altmann. E. P. Dutton & Company
$10 8 7/8 x 6; 2 vols.; 358 + 333 pp. New York

This collection goes up to December, 1882, two months before Wagner died. It is especially valuable for its liberal selection of letters after 1864, at which date Wagner's autobiography stops. But, as the editor himself points out, the present edition is by no means complete. The letters to Nietzsche, for example, are omitted entirely, and so are those to the Philharmonic Society of London. There are several facsimiles and reproductions of photographs. The translation from the German is by M. M. Bozman.

NAPOLEON AND HIS WOMEN FRIENDS.

By Gertrude Aretz. The J. B. Lippincott Company
$5 8 3/4 x 5 1/2; 375 pp. Philadelphia

A translation, by the indefatigable Eden and Cedar Paul, of "Die Frauen um Napoleon," by Gertrude Aretz, a specialist—like her husband, Paul Aretz—in feminine biography. The book is not confined to the love affairs of Napoleon, but also deals with his political relations with women. There is nothing new in it, but the materials are assembled in an effective way. At the end there is an elaborate bibliography, but no index.

LORD NORTHCLIFFE.

By R. Macnair Wilson. The J. B. Lippincott Company
$5 9 3/4 x 6; 304 pp. Philadelphia

Mr. Wilson is less a biographer than a eulogist. He admires Northcliffe excessively, and takes his pretensions quite seriously. That the man ever had any motive save Service never apparently occurs to him. The book lacks an index.

THE LETTERS OF BAUDELAIRE.

Translated by Arthur Symons. Albert & Charles Boni
$4 9 1/8 x 6; 259 pp. New York

Baudelaire's life was one long calamity, and in his letters his chief discourse is of illness and debts. They make rather depressing reading, but they at least throw a clear light into the mentality of one of the most singular and curious men of the Nineteenth Century. Mr. Symons' translation, as usual, is excellent, as is his brief preface. The book ought to have an index, but hasn't.

Continued on page xxxviii

CHRISTMAS

FOR FATHER

"Julius Caesar" by Victor Thaddaeus
A biography to dynamite.
His classic tradition. (price $5.00)

FOR MOTHER

"Letters of Mme. de Sévigné"
(I certainly can't go wrong on this) price for 2 volumes $8.50

FOR SISTER

"Great Stories of All Nations" by Maxim Lieber and Blanche Cotton Williams Pl. D.
160 stories representing 38 literatures, and more a dull page.
a good "Bed Book" price $5.00

MEMORANDA

FOR BROTHER

"John Paul Jones, Man of Action"
by Philippe Russeel (Bill was in the Mary and thinks he's a "man of action") price $5.00

FOR AUNT MARY

"The Wintthrop" by Sybil Horton
A novel about a "good woman."
(I wonder will Auntie see the point?)
price $2.50

FOR UNCLE NED

"The Secret Memoirs of the Duke of Albano" (Edited by Richard Chantemesse)
A rather interesting gift for a most discerning uncle. price $5.00

NB I see BRENTANO'S published every one of these books. Fine!

The Best Gift for Christmas that expresses so well the sincere good wishes of the giver—that will be a delight this Christmas, and still a delight next Christmas and for many years more, for it is the gift that lasts a lifetime.

WEBSTER'S NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY THE MERRIAM WEBSTER is praised by hundreds of Supreme Court Judges as their authority; indorsed by Presidents and Department Heads of leading Universities, Colleges, and Normal Schools; used for over fifty years as standard by the Government Printing Office at Washington and indorsed by high officials in all branches of the Government.

A Library in One Volume

in dictionary form, equivalent in type matter to a 15-volume encyclopedia. In its 2,700 pages there are 452,000 entries, including 408,000 vocabulary terms; 32,000 geographical subjects; 12,000 biographical entries; 100 valuable tables; over 6,000 illustrations. Constantly kept up to date.

Thousands of NEW WORDS that have recently come into use are included: audion, Freud, Coolidge tube, Fascisti, radiophone, aerograph, eugenism, helicopter, Stalin, etc.,—with meaning, use, spelling, pronunciation, etymology.

G. & C. Merriam Company
Springfield, Mass.

GET THE BEST

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR FREE INFORMATION

G. & C. Merriam Co., Springfield, Mass.

Send me FREE, new richly illustrated pamphlet containing sample pages of Webster's New International Dictionary.
(Mercury 12-27)

Name _____

Address _____

Check List of NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xxxvi

COMMODORE VANDERBILT: An Epic of American Achievement.

By Arthur D. Howden Smith.

Robert M. McBride & Company

$5 9 3/4 x 6 1/4; 339 pp. New York

This is less a formal biography than a character sketch. It suffers from a somewhat over-ornate manner: Mr. Smith frequently attempts to reconstruct whole dialogues, and so gives his narrative the form of romantic fiction. He is obviously a great admirer of Vanderbilt, and will have it that the old boy was a man of great rectitude. The book should be read in connection with the Vanderbilt chapters in "A History of the Great American Fortunes," by Gustavus Myers.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS

HOME-MAKING: A Profession for Men and Women.

By Elizabeth Macdonald and Forrester Macdonald.

The Marshall Jones Company

$2 8 1/4 x 5 3/4; 267 pp. Boston

The authors start out with the thesis that home-making is a vocation like other vocations. They then point out that "for the first time in recorded history [it] is brought squarely into competition with other callings." This, obviously, is bad for the future of the country, and something must be done to make home-making more desirable than secretarial work, hosiery selling or transatlantic flying. The solution is very simple. It is the duty of society to see to it that home-making "offers superior hours of labor, financial reward and social prestige." This matter settled, the authors plunge into the body of their work, a highly scientific discussion of the "professional standards and ideals" of the home. There are chapters on "Qualifications and Results," "Clothing Selection and Care," "The Conduct of Personal and Social Relationships," "The Child as a Social Investment," "Mental Development," "Home in the Creative Present," and "Home and the Law." The book is full of sparks of wisdom, especially the chapter on "Mental Development." Here are two typical observations: (a) "Wise use of leisure will include both fun and self-improvement," and (b) "Both work and play must be productive. . . . Pleasure is not an end in itself. It is a means to an end and the objective is the growing conception of the good life." Elizabeth Macdonald is professor of home economics at the celebrated Boston University, and Forrester Macdonald has two degrees, denoting that he is a master of arts and of education.

NEW GOVERNMENTS OF EASTERN EUROPE.

By Malbone W. Graham, Jr. Henry Holt & Company

$5 8 1/2 x 5 1/2; 816 pp. New York

This is a companion volume to the same author's

Continued on page xl

GEORGE SAND—

The Search for Love

By MARIE JENNEY HOWE

A biography of one of the most gifted and contradictory figures of modern times. The woman who, as Heine said, "set the world on fire" is portrayed as lover, as pioneer of feminine freedom and as woman of genius in a book which promises to reverse the traditional judgment of her character. Illustrated. $5.00

THE MAN WHO WAS BORN AGAIN

By PAUL BUSSON

"Essentially masculine, belonging with 'Jurgin' and 'Tristram Shandy'."—The Chicago Daily News. $2.50

COUNTERPOINT

By JOSEPHINE DASKAM BACON

A modern view of marriage in a vivid novel. $2.50

THE ARRESTED MOMENT

By CHARLES CALDWELL DOBIE

Representative stories by the author of "Less than Kin." $2.50

THE LAST DEVIL

By SIGNE TOKSVIG

Romance and black magic in the Basque Mountains. $2.00

SHOW WINDOW

By ELMER DAVIS

"Deplorably unorthodox" opinions upon the men and manners of these times by a gifted satirist. $2.50

THE BOOK OF THE GLOUCESTER FISHERMEN

By JAMES B. CONNOLLY

The saga of a disappearing breed of American Heroes. This is a book of the rough sea, written by one who has sailed it with the men whose courageous exploits he records. With many illustrations by Henry O'Connor.

Boxed. $5.00

THE WHITE MAN'S DILEMMA

By NATHANIEL PEFFER

A survey of the climax of The Age of Imperialism. $2.50

THE GOLDEN COMPLEX

By LEE WILSON DODD

A defense of inferiority—"as wise and sound as it is lively."—Dorothy Canfield. $1.75

SALAMMBO

By GUSTAVE FLAUBERT

With Illustrations by MAHLON BLAINE

Flaubert's magnificent story of ancient Carthage has been given an adequate setting in this volume—uniform with "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." Boxed. $5.00

At all booksellers

Publishers

THE JOHN DAY COMPANY

New York

Books in the day's news!

George Washington

Vol. II—The Rebel and the Patriot

1762 1777

By RUPERT

HUGHES

FROM the indecisive, young Virginia patrician, Washington emerges into a man of action, one of the builders of America. The early, stirring days of the Revolution are set forth with unparalleled fairness to all sides; the character of the man is developed with a completeness in reference to available material that must establish a new point of departure for all other biographers.

$5.00

The Builders of America

By ELLSWORTH HUNTINGTON and LEON F. WHITNEY

What is intelligence worth in America today? A scientific statement of the causes behind the dominance, through sheer numbers, of the booboisie. "Frank and honest . . . hits every American where he lives."—Phila. Ledger.

$3.50

Religious Liberty

The Great American Illusion

By ALBERT C. DIEFFENBACH

A challenge flung to intolerance, Fundamentalism and bigotry by a clear-headed modernist who sees a state church being imposed on the country.

$1.50

Navigator

By ALFRED
STANFORD

The Story of Nathaniel Bowditch of Salem

The American Mercury says: "Has caught the glamour of old Salem and illuminated a bright page of American naval history. A romantic and stirring story . . . strangely moving." Eugene O'Neill, William McFee and John Macy concur!

$2.50

WILLIAM
MORROW & CO.
303 Fifth Ave. New York

Check List of NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xxxviii

well-known "New Governments of Central Europe." It describes in detail the break-up of Russia, and the formation of the succession states. Special attention is paid to the ebb and flow of parties, and there are charts which set forth the facts in a very clear manner. The work is heavily documented, and there is an unusually rich appendix, containing, among other things, the constitutions of all the states discussed.

THE PROHIBITION MANIA.

By Clarence Darrow and Victor S. Yarros.

Boni & Liveright

$2.50

8 1/4 x 5 1/2; 254 pp.

New York

The sub-title of this book is "A Reply to Professor Irving Fisher," and in form it is an elaborate refutation of the arguments he advanced in "Prohibition At Its Worst." Most readers of these lines, in all probability, will decide that he is disposed of completely. Messrs. Darrow and Yarros do not believe that a repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment is possible. "The Anti-Saloon League and similar agencies" they say, "are undoubtedly able by coercion and intimidation" to prevent it. But the choice thus left before the government and the people is not between its complete enforcement and nullification, but between nullification and the "reasonable modification or repeal" of the Volstead Act. The Volstead Act, as it stands, can never be enforced.

BRITISH WAR FINANCE: 1914-1919.

By Henry F. Grady.

The Columbia University Press

$4

9 x 6 1/2; 316 pp.

New York

This is a minute exposition of the British financial machinery during the World War. Dr. Grady, who was American Trade Commissioner at London during part of the period he deals with, thinks that though London has at the moment relinquished the financial leadership of the world to New York, it will probably regain it as soon as the labor situation and industrial technique of Great Britain are brought back to their normal state.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF SACCO AND VANZETTI.

By Eugene Lyons.

The International Publishers

$1.50

7 1/2 x 5; 208 pp.

New York

Mr. Lyons has no doubt that Sacco and Vanzetti were completely innocent. He sees their execution as an attempt to put down a class movement by force majeure, and so describes it, and the antecedent trial and hearings. Of particular interest are his chapters on the early life of the two men in America—a grim series of pictures of the depressing handicaps that lie upon penniless immigrants.

Continued on page xlii

CALAMITY JANE And The Lady Wildcats

By DUNCAN AIKMAN

She was a "man" among the bad men of the wildest West. She knew how to pack her guns and her liquor like a gentleman—to handle her black snake and cut plug like a trapper, take care of herself and manage her turbulent "boy friends" with efficiency. Calamity Jane, born into the hoop-skirt age, was nevertheless the pioneer of all the flappers, and her story will amuse, thrill, horrify and delight.

Illustrated, $3.50

By ROSAMOND
LEHMANN

DUSTY ANSWER

"An honest and charming performance. The story is enveloped in a still, midsummer-like beauty. A view of this generation that is authentic and full of flavor."

—N. Y. Evening Post.

$2.50

Stuff and Nonsense

By WALTER DE LA MARE

Delightful verse imbued with buffoonery.
Illustrated, $2.00.

Jean-Christophe

By ROMAIN ROLLAND

A new edition complete in one volume of Romain Rolland's superb study of the life of a man. $5.00.

Drawings from the Book of Job

By WILLIAM BLAKE

Limited to 1000 copies. Blake's best drawings, reproduced by a beautiful collotype process. $5.00.

"And So To Bed"

By J. B. FAGAN

A comedy in three acts, putting the fascinating Mr. Pepys on the stage. $2.00.

Three Plays

By WILLIAM ARCHER

Martha Washington, Beatriz Juana and Lidia are in this volume. Bernard Shaw has written a long foreword. $3.00.

A Short History of the Drama

By MARTHA F. BELLINGER

A clear and refreshing treatment of the drama in its various stages, since its beginning. $3.50.

Uncle Joe Cannon

By L. WHITE BUSBEY
(for twenty years his secretary)

The Reminiscences of a Pioneer American

"The book is lively and buoyant, and makes better reading than almost any biography since Boswell."

—The New York Times.

Illustrated

$5.00

HENRY HOLT & COMPANY - - - Publishers - - - New York

For Christmas- The Treasured Gift

Best for You to Use—and Therefore Best for You to Give. For pleasure and for helpfulness, too, Webster's Collegiate Dictionary is ideal. It is a gift to delight anyone who reads, writes or studies, for it is a constant source of the information needed most frequently. This Christmas give the handsome Bible-Paper edition of the gift that will be welcomed by the friend in business or professional work, the student in college or high school, the mother at home—by all discriminating people. It is THE BEST ABRIDGED DICTIONARY because it is based upon the "Supreme Authority," Webster's New International Dictionary. Contains a full vocabulary of 106,000 words with definitions, etymologies, pronunciations, and indications of proper use—a dictionary of Biography—a Gazetteer—a special section showing, with illustrations, the rules of punctuation, use of capitals, abbreviations, etc.—Foreign words and phrases—NEW WORDS, and a wealth of other useful information.

Webster's Collegiate Dictionary

1,700 illustrations; 1,256 pages; printed on Bible Paper; bound in full Leather with gold stamping, $7.50; in flexible Fabrikoid, gold stamping, $6.00; in Art Canvas, $5.00. At all bookstores, or write to the publishers.

G. & C.
MERRIAM
CO.
Springfield
Mass.

Get The Best

xlii

Check List of NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xl

MATERIALISM AND EMPIRICO-CRITICISM.

By V. I. Lenin. The International Publishers
$4 9 x 6; 342 pp. New York

This is the first volume in a projected thirty volume edition of the complete works of Lenin. It was first published in Moscow in 1909 as a criticism of the flourishing revisionist movement among the Marxians of the day, and instantly set the Russian revolutionary world into a turmoil. The present translation into English, the first yet undertaken, is by Dr. David Kvitko, who is also the author of the introduction.

BALLYHOO: The Voice of the Press.

By Silas Bent. Boni & Liveright
$3 8 x 5½; 398 pp. New York

This treatise on current American journalism is good journalism, but not much more. Mr. Bent piles up a large mass of immensely amusing facts, but his discussion of causes and motives is usually somewhat vague. His best chapters deal with the Washington correspondents and their imbecilities, the grotesque doings of the tabloids, and the influence of press agents. At times he is singularly uncritical. He seems to believe, for example, that the course of the Boston Herald in the Sacco-Vanzetti case was completely frank and courageous. He has apparently never heard of the efforts of the Baltimore Sun to restore independence to journalism and improve news reporting.

AMERICAN LOANS TO GERMANY.

By Robert R. Kuczynski. The Macmillan Company
$3 7¾ x 5; 378 pp. New York

This analysis covers only the years from 1924 to 1926 inclusive, but for that period it is singularly comprehensive. Mr. Kuczynski examines the financial situation which caused the vast German borrowing in this country, and then goes on to discuss the security behind the different classes of loans, the purposes to which they are being put, and the provisions made for their amortization. He offers no advice to investors, but confines himself to an exhaustive statement of the known facts. The book is one of the publications of the Institute of Economics.

COMPANY UNIONS.

By Robert W. Dunn. The Vanguard Press
50 cents 7¼ x 4½; 206 pp. New York

Company unions are an invention of American capitalism. They are only fifteen years old, but they have already caused heavy damage to the free workers' unions. In this book Mr. Dunn describes the company unions of some of the more important corporations, such as the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, the Eastman Kodak Company, the General Electric, the

Continued on page xliv

Dodd, Mead Books of Winning Merit

The Dodd, Mead PRIZE NOVEL for 1927

REBELLION

By Mateel Howe Farnham

"Rebellion" is at last the God-awful truth about the possessive father. Ever since Jephtha, that particular old devil has been getting away with this meanness unscathed. Mateel Howe Farnham has exposed him for the fraud he is. What a story she has told; a new story, modern, simple enough, but gorgeous in its homely reality."—William Allen White. $2.00

GRITNY PEOPLE

By R. Emmet Kennedy

A sensitive and delightful record of the intimate life of the Negroes of Gretna, Louisiana. The characters are living people whom the author has permitted to speak for themselves. $2.50

THE MAD CAREWS

By Martha Ostenso

Author of "Wild Geese" and "The Dark Dawn."

"In prose that bursts into passages of wild beauty the author dramatizes each and every member of the Carew Family."—New York Times. $2.50

DECORATIVE MOTIVES OF ORIENTAL ART

By Katherine M. Ball

In interpretation of the various motives, symbols and legends of the art of the Orient. 673 illustrations $2.00

YE GODS AND LITTLE FISHES

By Eugene Slocum

"Perfectly corking fish book. I swallowed it hook, line and sinker. The chapter on breeding habits of trout should become a classic."—George A. Dorsey. Illustrated. $2.50

MOSTLY MISSISSIPPI

By Harold Speakman

A charming travel story of a 2,450 mile journey by canoe and house-boat from the headwaters of the Mississippi to New Orleans. Delightful vignettes of life on the river and in the towns and cities along its banks. Cleverly illustrated. $3.50

THE STORY OF A COUNTRY TOWN

By E. W. Howe

An entirely new edition completely reset and one of the great landmarks in American letters. Illustrated. $3.50

THE BARBURY
WITCH

By Anthony Richardson

"A powerful novel, written with great sensitiveness. The sinister, selfish Mrs. de Fevel will haunt the reader long after the book has been finished."—The Bookman, London. $2.50

THE BEST SHORT STORIES
OF 1927

Edited by Edward J. O'Brien

The thirteenth annual issue containing twenty best short stories of the year by Ernest Hemingway, Sherwood Anderson, Joseph Hergesheimer, DuBose Heyward, Owen Wister, and others. Also the usual Year Book Information. $2.50

THE BEST PLAYS OF 1926-27

By Burns Mantle

Eighth annual issue of this popular Year Book of the Drama with text of the ten best plays including Broadway, The Road to Rome, Saturday's Children, The Constant Wife, In Abraham's Bosom, The Play's the Thing, Daisy Mayme, Chicago, and others. $3.00

A VAGABOND
IN FIJI

By Harry L. Foster

The fiercely joyous adventures of a travel expert who went through Samoa, the Tongas and the Fijis in search of cannibals. Delightfully amusing. Illustrated. $3.00

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY

449 Fourth Ave., New York

215 Victoria St., Toronto

The New School for Social Research

Winter Term: Jan. 2—March 24

Among other courses:

H. N. BRAILSFORD—Progress and Reaction in Post-War Europe
Tuesdays and Thursdays, 8.20–9.50 P. M.
(Jan. 3–Feb. 9)

DR. ALFRED ADLER—Individual Psychology of Vienna
Tuesdays and Thursdays, 8.20–9.50 P. M.
(Feb. 14–March 22)

EDWIN B. HOLT—Psychology of Human Nature
Fridays, 8.20–9.50 P. M.

JOSEPH JASTROW—Mentality, Normal and Abnormal
Mondays, 8.20 P. M.

THE PROBLEM OF FREEDOM IN THE MODERN WORLD
John Dewey, H. M. Kallen, Walter Lippmann,
John A. Ryan and Others
Wednesdays, 8.20 P. M.

GORHAM B. MUNSON—American Literature and Human Experience
Thursdays, 8.20 P. M.

ALFRED KREYMBORG—Modern American Poetry
Wednesdays, 8.20 P. M.

Twelve lectures in each course; course tickets, $15

Write for catalogue

Tenth Avenue & 23d Street, New York City

Can You Buy Books in Your Town?

You can buy automobiles, radios, and tickets to the movies, but can you buy the books everyone is reading?

Why not give your town a book service? You will find yourself rewarded with absorbing work, rich human contacts, and financial profit.

With a moderate capital you can open a bookshop or rental library. Write us for free practical suggestions.

Bookselling Information Service
Room 776, 18 West 34th St., New York

Check List of NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xlii

International Harvester, the Standard Oil of New Jersey, the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, the Interborough Rapid Transit, the Pullman Company, the Great Northern Railroad, the Santa Fé, and the Union Pacific.

OLD SOX ON TRUMPETING.

By E. T. Gundlach. The Consolidated Book Publishers
$2 7½ x 4½; 362 pp. Chicago

The scene here is the Athens of Pericles, but the subject is modern advertising, and especially American advertising. Mr. Gundlach is an advertising man of great experience, and the head of one of the large American agencies. Under the cover of broad burlesque he here gives the whole art and mystery of advertising a vigorous raking. Do advertisers make money because they advertise? Or do they advertise because they have made money? These and other such questions are subjected to the test of a pawky and devastating humor.

POLITICAL MYTHS AND ECONOMIC REALITIES.

By Francis Delaisi. The Viking Press
$4 9¼ x 6; 446 pp. New York

A powerful polemic against nationalism, which, in M. Delaisi's view, offers a dangerous impediment to the economic laws which actually rule the world. The book was completed two years ago, before the Locarno Conference, but its argument is still apposite.

LARS PORSENA, or, The Future of Swearing and Improper Language.

By Robert Graves. E. P. Dutton & Company
$1 5¾ x 4¼; 77 pp. New York

This instructive little book belongs to the Today and Tomorrow Series. Mr. Graves believes that profanity is decaying in the English-speaking countries, and that, like prayer, it can only be revived by a bloody war or by "widespread revolutionary disturbances." He discusses its purposes and technic with great learning and no little æsthetic passion. The book would make a charming present for a somewhat advanced clergyman.

DECLINING LIBERTY AND OTHER PAPERS.

By John A. Ryan. The Macmillan Company
$4 8½ x 5½; 350 pp. New York

This is a collection of Dr. Ryan's occasional papers, mainly reprinted from magazines. Perhaps the most interesting of them is a somewhat elaborate discussion, from the standpoint of a Catholic theologian, of the citizen's obligation to submit to Prohibition. Dr. Ryan inclines to the belief that obedience to the Eighteenth Amendment is binding in conscience,

Continued on page xlvii

The Non-Fiction Find of 1927

The Story of Law

By John M. Zane, LL.D., Litt. D.

The only complete story of the law from its primitive beginnings to its modern development. A fascinating narrative that is practically the story of civilization. Introduction by James M. Beck, former Solicitor-General of the United States. Popularly Illustrated, $5.00

The War Diary of a Nurse "Sister"

By Helen Dore Boylston

The woman's side of it at last! "It speaks with a voice that will be heard over two continents."—Montreal Star. $2.00

A Man's Book for Men Ten—and Out! By Alexander Johnston

The story of the prize ring in America. "Bob" Davis says: "All the fights with which I am familiar are reported with amazing accuracy and color." Foreword by Gene Tunney. Illustrated. $3.50

For Those Who Want Thrills

WHO KILLED CORALIE?

By the Aresbys

A baffling mystery of San Francisco's Chinatown. $2.00

THE TRAMP

By W. Townend

A gripping tale of the sea, "Stirs the blood and warms the heart."—N. Y. Times. $2.00

THE GUN- SLINGER

By George M. Johnson

A western with the kick of a .45. $2.00

The Memoirs of the Marquise de Keroubec

Piquant and diverting confessions. "She writes well, and it must be said, entertainingly, even when she isn't naughty."—Philadelphia Ledger. Illus. $2.50

Boys Think It's Great Walt Henley D. S. M.

By Alfred F. Loomis

Walt was born a "son of the sea" and his adventures in the Navy make a story of a thousand thrills. 4-color frontispiece. $2.00

Out of Russia in search of El Dorado. What has New York in store for this proud, hopeful little group?

The Royal Cravatts

By Lillian Rogers

"Only once in a very long while do we discover a novel which treats of life from a new angle—that transfigures it with imagination. Such a book is 'The Royal Cravatts.'"—Boston Transcript. $2.50

At All Bookstores

IVES WASHBURN, Inc., Publisher, New York

Original Leaves from RARE OLD BOOKS

AREMARKABLE new plan that enables book-lovers to acquire original pages (NOT facsimiles) from authentic typographical treasures of the past—books two, three and four centuries old.

FOLIOPHILES, Inc., a group of booklovers and typographical authorities, make it possible for collectors and lovers of the beautiful to own genuine leaves taken from scores of priceless, rare, old volumes, many of which (especially the "incunabula") are entirely beyond the average purse.

Those who cherish the printed page for its aesthetic, literary and historical associations, and all lovers of the beautiful will find a singular joy in the possession of these rare literary heirlooms. As a Christmas gift they reflect distinction on recipient and giver.

Following are just a few of the leaves we are now offering, attractively mounted, with brief scholarly description accompanying each specimen. Price includes packing and postage.

- Dante's Divine Comedy, a quaint page, with woodcut illustration. Venice, 1529. $3.00
Sixteenth Century Breviary, a small double leaf printed in black and red. Place and date unknown. $1.50
Historia de Gentibus, a sort of encyclopaedia, with woodcut illustration. Rome, 1555. $2.00
Workes of Ben Jonson, an early edition of Jonson's complete "workes." London, 1640. $1.50
Gerard's Herball, a famous book of household remedies with quaint illustrations. London, 1633. $2.00
Parliamentary Acts of the Reign of William III. Printed in large gothic type. London, 1695. $1.00

The collection of six, in an attractive $10 box, special.

Catalogue describing over 100 leaves
FREE upon request

THE FOLIOPHILES, INC.

32 West Fifty-Eighth Street New York City

"A real Treasure Chest of 'English Unde-filed.' We commend it unreservedly"

— Review of Reviews

MARCH'S THESAURUS DICTIONARY

gives you complete mastery over the English Language. Finds instantly the right word to express your every thought, the exact word for your desired shade of meaning, and defines these words so that you know you are using them correctly. A thesaurus, plus a dictionary, with encyclopedic information on literature, history, geography, etc. 1462 pages, 7 1/4 x 10 1/2, on thin opaque paper. Bound in handsome Buckram.

INSPECT AT OUR RISK

this Treasure House of Words and Knowledge. Send in the coupon below. Use the book for ten days. Then if you do not find it most useful and valuable, you simply need return it.

— Send on Approval Coupon —

HISTORICAL PUBLISHING CO., Dept. A M-12P
1334 Cherry St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Please send me (postpaid in U. S. and Canada) the new Amplified Edition of March's Thesaurus Dictionary. I will pay the postman $3.00 plus 12c postage and if I keep the book will pay you $2.00 per month for three months.

If for any reason I do not wish to keep it I will return it in good condition within 10 days and you are to refund my $3.12, which includes postage.

Name
Address

xlvi

Check List of NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xlv

though he argues that it will cease to be so when the failure of that amendment is obvious and certain. As for the Volstead Act, he is in no doubt. Whole sections of it, he says, are "neither morally binding nor morally valid." He also discusses birth control, the war debt question, Fascism, equal suffrage, public ownership, divorce, and other such current matters.

THE WAR ON MODERN SCIENCE.

By Maynard Shipley. Alfred A. Knopf
$3 8 1/4 x 5 1/2; 415 pp. New York

In this painstaking and heavily documented work the author, who is founder and president of the Science League of America, describes at length the effort of anti-evolutionists and other such ignoramus to put down the teaching of science in the South, in the Middle West and in California. It is an appalling record, and Mr. Shipley believes that it is by no means closed. His evidence should be interesting to those optimists who regard the anti-evolutionists as mere clowns, and hold that their campaign against sense has been stopped.

DO AMERICANS REALLY VALUE EDUCATION?

By Abraham Flexner. The Harvard University Press
$1 7 x 4 1/2; 49 pp. Cambridge

This is a lecture delivered on the Inglis Foundation. Mr. Flexner, who is director of the division of studies and medical education of the General Education Board, argues eloquently for a better appreciation of the social value of the scholar, and in particular for better support of him. In one of the leading American universities, he says, there is but one professor in the faculty of arts and sciences receiving $10,000 a year. The salaries of the other teachers of full professorial rank range from $3000 to $8000. Associate professors are paid an average of $4000, assistant professors $3000, and instructors $2000.

THE CITY MANAGER.

By Leonard D. White. The University of Chicago Press
$3 8 1/4 x 5 1/2; 355 pp. Chicago

There are now 375 cities which have adopted the city manager form of government. Dr. White, who is professor of political science at the University of Chicago, has made a thorough study of six of them—Cleveland, Cincinnati, Kansas City, Pasadena, Dayton, O., and Berkeley, Calif.—in an attempt to arrive at some general conclusions. He thinks that the city manager scheme—or, to be more accurate, the council-manager scheme—"is the most perfect expression which the American people have yet evolved of the need of combining efficient administration with adequate popular control." The city managers them-

Continued on page xlviii

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

An absorbing novel of American life acclaimed by critics all over the country—"An accomplishment for American letters."—Zona Gale.

THE GRAND-MOTHERS

The Harper Prize Novel
GLENWAY WESCOTT

$2.50

HARPER

Books for Christmas

Theodore Roosevelt in Action

THE ROUGH RIDERS

By
HERMAN HAGEDORN

The triple-barrelled story of a boy, a regiment and a nation.

$2.00

A novel of the Sea and Jungle, of London, of Ships and the glamorous East—"As fine as anything done within the present century."—Arnold Bennett.

GALLIONS REACH

By
H. M. TOMLINSON

$2.50

LADY, WHAT OF LIFE?

By LESLEY STORM

A striking novel of three sisters by a new writer. The latest English success.

$2.00

THE SPREADING DAWN

By BASIL KING

Six stories of the borderland between life and death.

$2.00

One of America's finest stories of Pioneer Life.

GIANTS IN THE EARTH

By
O. E. RÖLVAAG

"A new American writer who will probably hold his place in the first class of world writers."

William Allen White.

$2.50

AVARICE HOUSE

By JULIAN GREEN

"One of the truly important novels of our day. This man's name is going to go far."—Harry Hansen in the World.

$2.50

IMPATIENT GRISELDA

By DOROTHY SCARBOROUGH

A daring novel about a modern Lilith.

$2.00

A fine, new edition of the book Chicago wanted to burn. A splendid, thoroughly modern history of the United States.

THE AMERICAN ADVENTURE

By DAVID SAVILLE MUZZEY

2 vols.

$10.00

CITIES AND MEN

By
LUDWIG LEWISOHN

An appraisal of striking literary figures.

$2.50

LITERARY BLASPHEMIES

By ERNEST BOYD

A series of essays on literary gentlemen written from an unconventional point of view.

$2.50

A frank appraisal of life and sex. "She writes with courage and clarity—Her book is a clear statement of the claims of instinct."—Harry Salpeter in the World.

THE RIGHT TO BE HAPPY

By MRS. BERTRAND RUSSELL

$3.00

HARPER & BROTHERS
49 East 33rd St. New York

The OUTLAWRY of WAR

By
Charles Clayton Morrison

Foreword by John Dewey

$3.00

The most important book on International relations since the Armistice.

"A great book . . .
clear and courageous thinking."—
SENATOR BORAH

What and Why in China

by Paul Hutchinson —Cloth, $1.00

Already acclaimed in more than sixty leading book reviews for its bright, clear picture of the present China situation.

AT BOOKSTORES

Willett, Clark & Colby

440 S. Dearborn St., Chicago

WHERE WAS JESUS between the ages of 12^{and}30

What was He doing Whence came Christianity

Read

THE GREAT MESSAGE A NEW BOOK

by

Author of "The Great Psychological Crime" . . . "The Great Work"
"The Great Known".

PIONEER PRESS
Hollywood, California

..$3. at all Bookstores..

xlvi

Check List of NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xlv

selves, he finds, have been singularly free from corruption, and, in fact, have furnished "a new and finer conception of official duty."

WHAT THE EMPLOYER THINKS.

By J. David Houser. The Harvard University Press
$2.50 8 3/8 x 5 3/4; 226 pp. Cambridge

Mr. Houser traveled all over the country and interviewed hundreds of employers and employes for the purpose of finding out why they don't like each other.
The results of his extensive and highly scientific observations are these: some employers treat their help as human beings, and are respected by them; others treat them autocratically, and arouse only their hatred; a third class of employers are somewhere between these two—and Mr. Houser is not quite sure what the effect of their attitude to their help is. He thinks that there is "a need for understanding on the part of the executive" if industry is to run smoothly, and also a "philosophy of ethical obligations."

THE FINE ARTS

MODERN RUSSIAN COMPOSERS.

By Leonid Sabaneyeff. The International Publishers
$2.75 8 1/4 x 5 1/2; 253 pp. New York

M. Sabaneyeff is a composer himself, and is intimately acquainted with practically all of the living composers he discusses. Of special interest and value are his chapters upon Scriabin (he spells it Skryabin) and Stravinsky. There are others on Prokofieff, Rye-bikoff, Myaskovski, Feinberg, Gnyesin, Metner, Gryechaninoff, the two Kreins, Stanchinski, Akimyenko, Roslavyets, and Yavorski. At the end M.
Sabaneyeff discusses the Moscow group of conservative composers, the new group of youngsters born since 1900, and the exiles in Paris and New York.

THE ART OF JAPAN.

By Louis V. Ledoux. The Japan Society
$3 9 1/4 x 6 1/4; 85 pp. New York

In this very brief sketch Mr. Ledoux first argues against the prevalent notion that the art of Japan is entirely derivative, and then discusses the painting, sculpture, literature, metal work and ceramics of the country. A short but useful bibliography is appended.

TREES AT NIGHT.

By Art Young. Boni & Liveright
$3 10 x 6 1/2; 39 pp. New York

Thirty-nine charming drawings of trees. In the best of them there is a fine poetic quality; in even the least there is excellent drawing. They are reprinted, in the main, from the Saturday Evening Post, Life and Collier's.

Continued on page l

The BULLFIGHTERS

By HENRY DE MONTHERLANT

A brilliantly original novel

$2.50. A picture in magnificent colours of the Soul of Spain. To the author, Romain Rolland wrote, "you are the greatest force in French letters today."

OUR MR. DORMER

By R. H. MOTTRAM

Author of "The Spanish Farm Trilogy"

$2.50. A century of changing England mirrored in the lives of Englishmen. Mr. Mottram is the direct successor to Galsworthy, Wells, and Bennett.

The IMAGE IN THE PATH

By GRENVILLE
VERNON

$2.50. Americans, not innocent, abroad. The story of a man's love for two women, a mother and her daughter. Unusual and powerful.

The DEMON CARAVAN

By GEORGES
SURDEZ

$2.00. A tale of North Africa by one of "Adventure" Magazine's cleverest writers. A brilliantly rapid and thrilling narrative of love and war.

The HOUSE of DISAPPEARANCE

By
J. JEFFERSON FARJEON
Author of "No. 17," etc.

$2.00. Farjeon's best book to date. A whirl of intrigue and mystery illumined by this author's never failing humour.

The CATHOLIC SPIRIT IN AMERICA

By GEORGE N. SHUSTER
Associate Editor of "The Commonwealth"

$3.00. A Catholic, who is a patriot and an ex-officer of the A. E. F., shoots straight from the shoulder.

MYSTERIES of the MISSING

By EDWARD H. SMITH

Author of "Famous Prison Mysteries" Illustrated. $3.50. The facts about famous disappearances: Charley Ross, Ambrose Bierce, Doctor Andrée, etc.—by the best-equipped writer in this field in America. A beautifully produced volume—with rare illustrations—for all lovers of mystery.

LINCOLN MACVEAGH
THE DIAL PRESS ~ NEW YORK

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

WHILE OUR business is almost exclusively with regular publishing houses, we also manufacture books for the occasional publisher or author. In addition to the most careful workmanship throughout, the author-publisher receives, as a part of our service, the benefit of our extensive experience in planning and designing his book.

The
VAIL-BALLOU PRESS

Main Office and Factory: Binghamton, N. Y.
New York Office: 200 Fifth Avenue

Check List of NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xlviii

CHINESE ART.

By R. L. Hobson. The Macmillan Company
$12.50 11 3/8 x 9; 15 pp. + 100 plates New York

The 100 colored plates in this stately quarto are in full color, and show superb printing. Sixty-two of them depict ceramic objects; the rest, jades, bronzes, paintings, furniture, carpets and wood carvings. No ivories are shown. The brief legends are in English, French and German, and there is an admirable introduction by the editor, who is keeper of ceramics and ethnology at the British Museum. In it he calls attention to something only too often forgotten: the influence exerted upon Chinese art by foreign example.

THE REMBRANDT DRAWINGS AND ETCHINGS.

By John C. Van Dyke. Charles Scribner's Sons
$12 12 3/8 x 9 3/4; 147 pp. New York

This is a very minute study of all the drawings and etchings attributed to Rembrandt, and an attempt, based on the latest findings, to differentiate between those made by Rembrandt himself and those made by his pupils and followers. There are numerous reproductions. Mr. Van Dyke is professor of the history of art and of architecture at Rutgers.

THE SCHUMANNS AND JOHANNES BRAHMS.

By Eugenie Schumann. Lincoln MacVeagh
$4 8 3/8 x 5 1/2; 219 pp. New York

The author began this work in 1920, when she was 69 years old: the period it deals with seems almost as remote today as that of Beethoven. What gives the book its value is her intimate and charming picture of the life of her mother, one of the most sincere and lovable artists who ever lived. Her father, who died when she was five years old, is necessarily somewhat shadowy. But her brothers and sisters, whose ends were mainly tragic, come out of it brilliantly, and so does Brahms. It is apparently her belief that Brahms was in love with her beautiful sister Julie, who married another in 1868 and was dead in three years.

LITERATURE

THE LIFE AND WORKS OF EDWARD MOORE.

By John Homer Caskey. The Yale University Press
$2 9 x 5 3/4; 202 pp. New Haven

Moore was a mediocre English essayist, dramatist and poet, who was born in 1712 and died in 1757. This is the first comprehensive study of him in English, and was presented as a doctoral thesis at Yale.

Continued in back advertising section, page xcvi

Complete
Book Manufacturing

H. WOLFF

Largest Capacity in N. Y.

508-534 West 26th St.
N. Y. Tel. Chick. 8667

Let us estimate on your next book

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

"Knowledge enormous makes a god of me"—KEATS

In the accelerated tempo of modern life intelligent men and women hunger and thirst after knowledge. They seek, and must have, the answers to the myriad of questions that tease their minds. What should they know of Science? What is important in History? Who are the great figures of Literature and Art? How have the philosophers changed religious thought? Now comes a brilliant survey of Man's knowledge—told in one vivid volume.

The OUTLINE of MAN'S KNOWLEDGE

History — Science — Literature — Religion — Art — Philosophy

By CLEMENT WOOD

HERE is the magnificent romance of everything human beings have learned since the first man walked upon the earth. All the outlines in one—woven together into one inspiring, instructive, delightful narrative. Eminent authorities in every field of human knowledge voice their enthusiasm:

Dudley Field Malone, Lawyer—

"'The Outline of Man's Knowledge' by Clement Wood is the most thrilling book I have read in ten years. The work is overwhelming in its range and detail, and the stirring mind and eloquent speech of Clement Wood grips you with an almost weird fascination."

Harry Elmer Barnes, Historian—

"Mr. Wood has achieved a high degree of success in condensation and selection. He has covered a vast field with sagacity and insight. His book should be a notable aid to the humanizing of knowledge."

Henry Fairfield Osborn, Scientist—

"The scientific and prehistoric portions are both accurate and interesting, expressed in an exceptionally clear style."

William McFee, Novelist—

"The plan of the book is splendid. I have read it from cover to cover and the recapitulations of general knowledge make a strong appeal to me. I wish I had time to go over it often."

Gamaliel Bradford, Biographer—

"Vivid and effective, and everywhere thick-sown with flashes of genius in expression and interpretation. The various developments in the long history of human evolution are connected with thoughtful and philosophical insight."

Edwin Markham, Poet—

"To know where they belong in the scheme of things is the outstanding desire of the thinking men and women of our time. Now comes "The Outline of Man's Knowledge," a work that is a daring and brilliant panorama of the march of man."

Fremont Older, Editor—

"It is a swiftly moving book, packed with information. It is brilliantly written, and without a dull page. An education in itself."

James Harvey Robinson, Historian

"Clement Wood has selected the really important points and managed to leave out a great deal of merely traditional information. Very interesting and enlightening."

The Outline of Man's Knowledge is the epic story of mankind told, in all its amazing wonder, in one splendidly complete volume of only 700 pages—a thrilling narrative that excites the mind, exalts the heart, inspires the imagination and holds the attention spellbound. Get a copy today.

Third Printing ~ $5 at all Booksellers

LEWIS COPELAND CO., Inc., Publishers , , , 119 West 57th Street, New York li

MACMILLAN HOLIDAY BOOKS

LEWIS BROWNE'S NEW BOOK THAT MAN HEINE

That Man Heine

By the author of
This Believing World
With the Collaboration of Elsa Wehl

"An acutely penetrative biography of one of the most difficult, fascinating personalities in literature . . . Recreated Heine and his day with understanding and sympathy. The work is assuredly one of the significant biographies of this day of so many biographies." — Philadelphia Ledger. $3.00

MEN OF DESTINY

By Walter Lippmann
Illustrated by Rollin Kirby

"Demands to be read by all thinking Americans. It has the fine quality of stimulation." — New York Post. $2.50

KING EDWARD VII

A Biography by Sir Sidney Lee

Volume II of an admirable story of King Edward's life, covering his reign from 1901 to 1910. Vol. II $8.50; the set $16.50

Harry Emerson Fosdick A PILGRIMAGE TO PALESTINE

The Christmas gift for every Bible lover—the glowing record of a trip to the Holy Land by one of America's great spiritual leaders. It is a different kind of travel book—a pageant of Biblical history against the background of Palestine today.

With frontispiece $2.00

THE MAN-EATERS OF TSAVO

By Lt. Col. J. H. Patterson

A new, illustrated edition of the story of man-eating lions in an African community. $3.50

THE AUTHENTIC LIFE OF BILLY THE KID

By Pat F. Garrett

With Introduction by Maurice G. Fulton

A colorful life of a notorious Western bad-man by the sheriff who killed him. $2.50

CHRIS- TIANITY

By

Charles Guignebert

A history of Christianity, in its main outlines, which deals with facts, their significance, consequences and connections. $3.75

NEW FICTION

The Wayward Man

By St. John Ervine

A robust tale of Belfast and the sea, by the author of The Foolish Lovers and Changing Winds. $2.50

Silent Storms

By Ernest Poole

"Ernest Poole has written another good book. It is first of all a good story. Splendidly individualized characterizations." — New York Times. $2.50

The Novels of Winston Churchill

A definitive edition of Mr. Churchill's ten great stories, printed from new plates in a special binding. See the set at your dealers.

Each $2.50; Set $25.00

FOR BOYS & GIRLS

The Golden Bird

By Katherine Gibson

Legends from many lands, beautifully illustrated. $2.50

The Adventures of Pinocchio

By C. Collodi

Hundreds of amusing pictures by Mussino. A perfect Christmas gift for children. $5.00

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

NEW YORK

MACMILLAN HOLIDAY BOOKS

SUPERB ART BOOKS

History of American Painting

By Samuel Isham and Royal Cortissoz

One of the sumptuous gift books of the season. The classic account of Isham, long out of print, is brought down to date by Mr. Cortissoz, and twenty-four new, full-page plates have been added to the numerous illustrations. This is now a complete critique of American painting in a form consonant with its subject.

$12.50

Chinese Art

Introduction by R. L. Hobson

To art lovers this magnificent collection of 100 color plates brings the wealth of form and color found in Chinese art. The work of the foremost Chinese artists and craftsmen is shown and a complete description faces each plate. The book is beautifully made and will delight the connoisseur.

$12.00

Edwin Arlington Robinson COLLECTED POETRY

The first complete, uniform edition of the work of one of America's great poets, in five volumes.

Leather $15.00; Cloth $10.50

TRISTRAM, the best selling book of poetry in America, now in the 50th thousand.

Gift Edition, boxed $3.00; Cloth $1.50

John Masefield TRISTAN and ISOLT

A new, dramatic version of the famous story of Tristan and Isolt, beautifully presented.

Autographed Edition $10.00; Regular Edition $2.00

Philip the King

A limited edition, autographed. Illustrated by Laurence Irving.

$12.50

Collected Works

Four volumes of plays and poetry in a handsome edition.

Each $3.00

THE RISE OF AMERICAN CIVILIZATION

By Charles A. Beard and Mary R. Beard

Fourth Large Printing

More than a hundred critics have called this the ideal story of America for the layman. Handsomely bound in two volumes, illustrated, with decorative end papers and tinted tops, boxed.

$12.50

The NEW Pictorial OUTLINE of HISTORY

By H. G. Wells

Illustrated—In One Volume

Seven hundred unusual illustrations, a thoroughly revised text, much new material and a new format and binding make this a completely new OUTLINE of HISTORY. If you have long wanted this book or are looking for the one gift-book for everybody, see this at your dealer's.

$7.50

From Grieg to Brahms

By Daniel Gregory Mason

A famous study of modern composers, with new material.

Illustrated $2.25

A new collection of poetry by Padraic Colum, illustrated by Boris Artzybasheff. Autographed Edition $5.00; Regular Edition $2.50

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

NEW YORK

A New Novel by William Stearns Davis

GILMAN of REDFORD

FAMOUS HISTORICAL ROMANCES by Mr. Davis

A VICTOR OF SALAMIS

Greece during Xerxes' invasion. $2.00

A FRIEND OF CAESAR

The fall of the Roman Republic. $2.50

THE BEAUTY OF THE PURPLE

The later Roman empire. $2.50

GOD WILLS IT

A tale of the first Crusade. $1.50

THE FRIAR OF WITTENBURG

The Protestant Reformation and Medieval Europe. $2.50

THE WHITE QUEEN

A colorful life of Louis IX of France. $2.00

BELSHAZZAR

Babylon and Persia struggling for world domination. $2.00

GILMAN of REDFORD,

like all of William Stearns Davis' novels, blends the story teller's art with historical facts into a work that is at once a gallant, spirited tale and a faithful picture of the social life, customs, language, politics and great events of colonial days. The rich, warm, vibrant life of young America glows through the pages of this romance of the Revolution.

The scene is laid around Harvard College and Boston in 1770-1775—a period filled with action and crises in the drama of revolt.

William Stearns Davis has once more made the past authentic and alive and added a distinguished book to American historical fiction. $2.50

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

New York Boston Chicago
Atlanta Dallas San Francisco

From Our Finest List in Ninety Years of Publishing!

The Atlantic Monthly $10,000 Prize Novel

JALNA

By MAZO DE LA ROCHE

*Leading Literary Reviews
Join the Chorus of Praise*

"An achievement."—New York Times Book Review.

"Remarkable literary achievement."—Boston Transcript.

"An exceedingly good book."—New York World.

"A memorable piece of work."—Chicago Tribune.

"It deserves recognition."—Christian Science Monitor.

"Exceptionally fine novel."—New York Evening Post.

"A novel that commands admiration."—New York Sun.

"Recommended without reservation."—Boston Herald.

"Robust and brawny fiction. Energetic. Alive."—Time.

"Characters dangerously real."—New York Herald Tribune.

"It is a rich book."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"Interesting, unhackneyed setting."—Los Angeles Times.

"Vividness which is remarkable."—Chicago Daily News

"Tremendously colorful."—Providence Journal.

75th Thousand! $2.00

Order Your Copy From Your Bookseller To-day!

Boston

LITTLE, BROWN & COMPANY

Publishers

From Our Finest List in Ninety Years of Publishing!

The New Novel by the author of "The Broad Highway"

THE QUEST OF YOUTH

By
JEFFERY FARNOL

The master of romantic fiction here tells the story of Sir Marmaduke Vane-Temperley, a weary man of the world, who goes forth in search of his vanished youth and meets with many adventures. It is a tale of the Regency period in Farnol's inimitable manner, with stirring action and unique characters. $2.50

UP THE YEARS FROM BLOOMSBURY

By George Arliss
A world famous character actor writes his reminiscences in charming style. With 18 illustrations. $4.00

THE ESTATE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON, DECEASED

By Eugene E. Prussing

The author has unearthed a veritable treasure house of information from Washington's will, which has never hitherto been available to the public. With 24 illustrations and 4 maps. $6.00

AN AMERICAN SAGA

By Carl Christian Jensen

One of the most important autobiographies in years. An Atlantic Monthly Press Publication. $2.50

New Books for Boys and Girls

THE TRADE WIND. By Cornelia Meigs. $2000 Beacon Hill Bookshelf Prize Story. 8 illustrations in color. $2.00

Three other volumes in this series:

EIGHT COUSINS. Louisa M. Alcott. 6 illustrations in color. $2.00

ROSE IN BLOOM. By Louisa M. Alcott. 6 illustrations in color. $2.00

WHAT KATY DID AT SCHOOL. By Susan Coolidge. 6 illustrations in color. $2.00

HEROES OF MODERN ADVENTURE. By T. C. Bridges and H. H. Tiltman. Thrilling tales of Amundsen, Grenfell, Lindbergh, etc. 32 illustrations. $2.00

HIDDEN ISLAND. By Anworth Ruth-erford. A thrilling adventure story for boys. 6 illustrations. $2.00

JOLLY GOOD TIMES. By Mary P. Wells Smith. A charmingly illustrated edition of a classic. 9 illustrations. $2.00

New Books for Boys and Girls

LONGLEGS THE HERON. By Thornton W. Burgess. The final volume in the delightful Smiling Pool Series. 8 illustrations in color. $1.75

THE MAGIC TOOTH, and Other Tales from the Amazon. By Elsie Spicer Eells. Folklore of the South American Indians. 11 illustrations. $2.00

THE REAL REWARD. By Christine Whiting Parmenter. A charming story of New Hampshire farm life, for girls. 6 illustrations. $2.00

OLD TESTAMENT STORIES. By Eulalie Osgood Grover. 88 stories skillfully adapted. An Atlantic Monthly Press Publication. 19 illustrations. $2.50

CHILDREN OF ANCIENT GAUL. By L. Lamprey. A vivid picture of the life of ancient Gaul. 21 illustrations. $1.75

Order Your Copy from Your Bookseller To-day!

Boston

LITTLE, BROWN & COMPANY

Publishers

From Our Finest List in Ninety Years of Publishing!

The Big Biography of the Autumn!

BISMARCK

THE STORY OF A FIGHTER

By EMIL LUDWIG

The author of "Napoleon" has taken a tremendous figure of the nineteenth century and made his biography as interesting and readable as a novel. "Bismarck" has been translated from the German by Eden and Cedar Paul. 661 pages. With 16 illustrations. $5.00

UPLANDS

By Mary Ellen Chase

A charming idyll with its scenes laid in the upland pastures and along the rough coast of Maine. An Atlantic Monthly Press Publication. $2.00

BOOKS AND BIDDERS

By Dr. A. S. W. ROSENBACH

A world figure among buyers and lovers of rare books tells, with freshness and spontaneity, a wealth of anecdote upon all phases of his hobby. An Atlantic Monthly Press Publication. With 79 illustrations. $5.00

THE LONESOME ROAD

By Lucy Furman

A new novel by the author of "The Quare Women." An Atlantic Monthly Press Publication. Second printing. $2.00

Recent Non-Fiction Books

THE GATEWAY TO AMERICAN HISTORY. By Randolph G. Adams. Using 76 rare illustrations from old books as a basis, Mr. Adams gives us a unique gateway to our history. An Atlantic Monthly Press Publication. $3.00

THEATRE: Essays on the Arts of the Theatre. Edited by Edith J. R. Isaacs. Essays by experts on the various phases of the theatre. 40 illustrations. $4.50

STATESMAN AND FRIEND: Correspondence of John Adams with Benjamin Waterhouse, 1784-1822. Edited, with an Introduction, by Worthington Chauncey Ford. An Atlantic Monthly Press Publication. $3.00

THE KINGDOM OF BOOKS. By William Dana Orcutt. A companion to the author's "In Quest of the Perfect Book." With 100 illustrations. $5.00

Recent Popular Novels

'THE SOWER OF THE WIND. By Richard Dehan. A haunting romance of the Antipodes by the author of "One Braver Thing." Second printing. $2.50

MISS BROWN OF X. Y. O. By E. Phillips Oppenheim. Another brilliant tale of intrigues. Second printing. $2.00

THE SENTIMENTALISTS. By Dale Collins. An amazing story of the tropic seas by the talented author of "Ordeal." Second printing. $2.00

THE EXILE. By Mary Johnson. A romance of Eldorado Island by America's leading historical novelist. $2.50

ALAS, POOR YORICK! By Alfred H. Bill. Episodes based on the wit and genius of Laurence Sterne, "Parson Yorick." An Atlantic Monthly Press Publication. $2.50

These books are for sale at all Booksellers

Boston

LITTLE, BROWN & COMPANY

Publishers

UPTON SINCLAIR

"in his conflicts never fails to be on the side of justice, liberty, and—paradoxically—even peace."

MONEY WRITES!

discusses the social and commercial influences which hold sway over present day authors. With a mass of knowledge of literary markets, of the details and transactions between editors, publishers and authors, Sinclair does not hesitate to use his information to prove his contention. A book that is sure to create much controversy. $2.50

OIL! Upton Sinclair's latest novel, is now in its eighth large printing and is a countrywide best seller. $2.50

JIM TULLY

"has got the rawness of life as few American writers have been able to get it, and with it a share of poetry and of very shrewd penetration . . . a view of mortals and of their sawdust hearts that will not soon vanish from the memory."—George Jean Nathan.

CIRCUS PARADE

"has no equal in the season's offerings."—Wm. Allen White. Illustrated, $2.50

FORD MADOX FORD

knows his New York as well as he knows Paris. But though he now loves America and the Americans, he has not forgotten how once he feared them. It was his fear which made him so keen in noting their differences from other lands and peoples, and his love which makes him sympathize with these differences. He writes as a citizen of the world, and the result is a very wise, vivid and amusing picture of the daily round of American life. $2.50

NEW YORK IS NOT AMERICA

$2.50

The Journal of William Maclay

With an Introduction by
CHARLES A. BEARD

"An irreverent contemporary on the fathers of the Republic. His Journal is salty and acidulous."—N. Y. Times. $4.00

Love in Chartres

by NATHAN ASCH

"Mr. Asch remains one of the most remarkable of the world's young writers."—Ford Madox Ford. $2.50

Wanderings in Arabia

by CHARLES M. DOUGHTY

An authorized abridgement of Travels in Arabia Deserta, in one volume, boxed, and for the first time at popular price. $4.00

Madrigal and Minstrelsy

by JULIET RAPHAEL

For some of the most famous poems of literature, the author has supplied musical compositions, and the artist illustrations, so that the combination of the verse, music and picture make a book of great interest to any lover of the three arts. $3.50

Gay Matter

by ARTHUR L. LIPPMANN

"I consider Arthur Lippmann one of our best writers of humorous verse."—Norman Anthony, editor of Judge. $2.00

Marx and Lenin

by MAX EASTMAN

"I read this book right through, thought it a much needed and most competently executed contribution to the literature of socialism."—George Bernard Shaw. $2.00

Albert & Charles Boni

66 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

THORNTON WILDER

justifies in his second novel

THE BRIDGE OF SAN LUIS REY

the high acclaim he received in England and America upon the publication two years ago of his first novel, THE CABALA.

"Mr. Wilder's style bears comparison with Pater, Saltus and Cabell."—New York Times.

"As good as all but the best of Anatole France or George Moore."—The Observer (England).

Illustrated. $2.50

"Incomparably the greatest love-story in the world. Beside their tempestuous passion and their suffering, even the love of Romeo and Juliet shrinks to the proportions of a summer idyl, and Trojan Helen becomes merely the symbol of unattainable perfection, a disembodied ideal."—Lewis Galantiere.

TRISTAN & ISEULT

By JOSEPH BEDIER

Translated by HILAIRE BELLOC

Illustrated. $2.00

Albert & Charles Boni

66 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

~ SCRIBNER BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS GIVING ~

COW COUNTRY

by Will James

"When the ordinary Western 'romances' are long forgotten, James's homely prose and his vivid, accurate drawings will remain to stamp him . . . as one of the little group of blown-in-the-glass interpreters of the West".—Stanley Walker in the N. Y. Times.

Illustrated by the author. $3.50

THROUGH THE WHEAT

by Thomas Boyd

With illustrations by Capt. John W. Thomason, Jr.

The desirability of a handsome, illustrated edition of this classic story of an American soldier in the World War has long been apparent; thanks to Captain Thomason's talent the ideal edition has now been achieved. The many illustrations are no less remarkable than the narrative itself. $3.00

From "Through the Wheat"

CLEARED FOR STRANGE PORTS

by Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Sr., Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, Richard Derby and Kermit Roosevelt.

The product of a family group—all of them great travellers and hunters and all gifted in setting down their experiences. A keenly interesting travel book. With illustrations from photographs. $3.50

JACQUES COEUR

by Albert Boardman Kerr

The epic story of a great mediaeval merchant prince now completely told for the first time. "A tremendous tale this . . . one must read it to properly appreciate the debt that those who enjoy history owe to Mr. Kerr."—Charles J. Finger in the New York Herald Tribune.

Illustrated $3.50

FIX BAYONETS!

by Capt. John W. Thomason, Jr.

A popular edition of another great war book. Profusely illustrated by the author. $2.00

DEMOCRATIC DISTINCTION IN AMERICA

by W. C. Brownell

A new volume of political, social, and aesthetic criticism by the author of "The Genius of Style". $2.50

LEAVES AND FRUIT

by Sir Edmund Gosse

Critical essays by an author of international fame. $3.00

THE REALM OF ESSENCE

by George Santayana

A distinguished philosopher presents here the second volume in a new system of philosophy. $3.50

THE REMBRANDT DRAWINGS AND ETCHINGS

With Critical Reassignments to Pupils and Followers.

by John C. Van Dyke

Limited to 1200 copies. The second and concluding volume on Rembrandt: with 193 illustrations.

Professor Van Dyke's volumes on Rembrandt have been freely criticized but they have made a profound impression on the art world and are accepted by the disinterested as serious and scholarly studies of a long recognized problem. $12.00

REMBRANDT AND HIS SCHOOL

A Critical Study of the Master and His Pupils with a New Assignment of Their Pictures.

by John C. Van Dyke

This first volume has 186 illustrations. $12.00

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 597 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

~ SCRIBNER BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS GIVING ~

THE NEW REFORMATION: From Physical to Spiritual Realities

By Michael Pupin

The general purpose of this new book by the author of "From Immigrant to Inventor" is to show how completely science has changed our comprehension of the universe, to the degree that the old religious formulas can no longer satisfy us. $2.50

HEREDITY AND HUMAN AFFAIRS

By Edward M. East

The facts of heredity along with what may be scientifically inferred make up this new book by the author of "Mankind at the Crossroads." Full of surprises in real information, entertaining and authoritative, here is a primer in genetics for the new era of scientific humanism. $3.50

THE ROMANTICK LADY

The Story of an Imagination

By Vivian Burnett

A biography of Frances Hodgson Burnett
by her son

"Mr. Burnett, with a marvellous restraint and deep understanding of the nature and life of his mother, has written a book which grips one from the first page to the last one. He has enriched it with anecdotes, reminiscent of famous characters associated with his mother, and a repressed but effective sentimental coloring."—The Washington Post.

Illustrated. $3.50 From "The Romantick Lady"

REMINISCENCES OF ADVENTURE AND SERVICE

By Major-General A. W. Greely

"A record of sixty-five years that is as entertaining a piece of non-fiction as one can find upon the bookshelves."—Louisville Courier-Journal. $3.50

THE BRIGHT DOOM

By John Hall Wheelock

A new and noteworthy volume of poetry. "There is a lifting passion in all his poetry. It is full of intensity . . . with never a pathetic or maudlin touch. It is spiritual poetry in the nicest sense of the word."—Saturday Review of Literature. $2.00

WASHINGTON SPEAKS FOR HIMSELF By Lucretia Perry Osborn

In Mrs. Osborn's book the reader may glimpse the real Father of his Country and form his own judgments based upon the facts. Washington here speaks for himself through a collection of actual letters and documents so arranged and connected as to give us a complete life story in his own words, one breathing his own hopes, aspirations, and perplexities. $3.50

TURNPIKES AND DIRT ROADS

By Leighton Parks, D.D.

"A delightful picture of a boyhood spent in the Cumberland Valley. Half the book gives a boy's recollections of life in the old South; the second tells of life behind the battle lines during the Civil War."—The Christian Century. $3.00

JOHN SARGENT

By the Hon. Evan Charteris, K. C.

This biography has been aptly described by one of its reviewers as "neither beneath the dignity of its subject nor over the heads of lay readers"—which serves to explain in brief why the book is accorded such marked distinction among contemporary biographies. This is the authorized and definitive Life of Sargent.

Profusely illustrated with half-tone reproductions of paintings and with reproductions of drawings. $6.00

THE WORLD CRISIS: 1916-1918

By The Rt. Hon. Winston S. Churchill

British Chancellor of the Exchequer

"He has told the story of the most tragic drama in the history of mankind as no other living man could have told it."—The Spectator.

With over thirty maps, many in colors. Two volumes. Second printing $10.00

FIELD-MARSHAL SIR HENRY

WILSON: His Life and Diaries

By Major-General Sir C. E. Callwell, K. C. B.

The outspoken diaries of one of the great military figures of the World War. "To him more than any other single man it was due that the British Expeditionary Force was ready to take its place in 1914."—General Sir Frederick Maurice in the New York Herald Tribune. Two volumes, bound. $10.00

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS · 597 FIFTH AVENUE · NEW YORK

Houghton Mifflin Company

LET'S GO!

Louis Felix Ranlett

"One of the most satisfying, one of the most faithfully human war books we have read."—Boston Herald. "A straightforward, unembellished story . . . one of the best bits of battle description written by any American."—The Independent. Illus. $2.50

THE LETTERS OF VINCENT VAN GOGH

This series of 458 letters, illustrated with reproductions of no less than 146 hitherto unpublished drawings, is one of the most remarkable and revealing documents in the history of modern art. Limited Edition, 2 vols. $15.00

COVERING WASHINGTON

J. F. Essary

Behind the scenes of official Washington with the correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, who relates a host of choice new anecdotes. Illus. $3.00

IN PRAISE OF FRANCE

Stephen Gwynn

A book of good food, good wine, pleasant scenes and people. Here is the real France for the sophisticated reader. Illustrated. $3.50

Some People

Harold Nicolson

"Very swagger . . . The most amusing book since 'South Wind.' "—The Dial.

"An accomplished bit of swank."—New York Herald Tribune.

"Above all, this is an intelligent book."—The Nation.

"Written with rare charm . . . a series of portraits informed by such wit, ironical good humor, keen observation, and knowledge of the world that they are a rare delight." — New Yorker.

"Mr. Nicolson has invented a new autobiographical method, almost as original and in its way quite as amusing as the biographical method invented by Mr. Lytton Strachey."—New Statesman. $2.50

SIR POMPEY AND MADAME JUNO

Martin Armstrong

"Armstrong is a master of short stories. Successor to Katharine Mansfield."—Conrad Aiken. $2.50

THE ART OF THEATRE-GOING

John Drinkwater

The author of "Abraham Lincoln" discusses playgoers, analyzes the emotions of the theatre, considers the Motion Picture, adds a chapter on the Repertory Movement, and illustrates the whole from his wide experience. $3.00

MINSTRELSY OF MAINE

Fannie H. Eckstorm and Mary W. Smyth

The largest collection yet brought together of the songs made and sung by the rugged hunters, lumberjacks, and fishermen and inhabitants of the Maine woods and shores. Here is a book of genuine American folk songs filled with boisterous humor. $3.50

THE TALL MEN

Donald Davidson

A second volume of verse by the author of "The Outland Piper." $2.00

TOPSY TURVY

Vernon Bartlett

A Europe with ears only for jazz and thoughts for pleasure is pilloried in these brilliant, biting and ironic stories of life in her capitals since the war. $3.00

Houghton Mifflin Company

THE ROAD TO XANADU

John L. Lowes

"This study of Coleridge is probably the most important piece of critical writing ever produced in America."—The Bookman. "It is one of those rare books that really tingle the spine."—Christopher Morley. Illus. $6.00

THE HARVEST OF A QUIET EYE

Odell Shepard

"Sunshine on a dusty road, friendly dogs, trout jumping in the stream—of such is this book composed."—New York Herald Tribune. Illus. $3.00

STRENUOUS ITALY

H. Nelson Gay

A soundly based and wisely interpretive study of Italy under the rule of Fascism and "il duce" which will clear up a great deal of conflicting opinion, misinformation, and prejudice. $3.00

ETAH AND BEYOND

Donald B. MacMillan

This is the fascinating narrative of MacMillan's expedition beyond the Arctic Circle in 1923-24, including everything the reader wishes to know about the far North. Illus. $5.00

He Said:

"Except for two mistakes, the earth would have been a success. One of these errors was the inclination of the ecliptic; the other was the differentiation of the sexes. Adams, in his splenetic temper, held that both these unnecessary evils had wreaked their worst on Boston. The climate made eternal war on society, and sex was a species of crime."

And this is only one of the innumerable razor-edged remarks that makes The Education of Henry Adams "one of the most entrancing books of the century." (New York Herald Tribune)

Today you can buy this great autobiography—formerly $6.00—in a handsome Popular Edition for only $2.50. For your own library or as a holiday gift to intelligent friends, we recommend

The Education of Henry Adams

SHELLEY

Walter Edwin Peck

After seven years of research Professor Peck has produced a life of "Mad Shelley" of remarkable vividness, completeness, and authenticity. "All future study of Shelley must begin here."—London Quarterly Review. 2 vols. Illus. $12.50

RIATA AND SPURS

Charles A. Siringo

The story of a real cowboy who started riding the Texas ranges when he was twelve years old and who tells his tale humorously, simply, and vividly. Illus. $3.00

SEVEN STRINGS OF THE LYRE

Elizabeth Schermerhorn

Few women have enjoyed the intimacy of so many men of genius as George Sand. Her romantic life, her search for a perfect love, makes a biography more absorbing than fiction. Illus. $4.00

THE HEART OF THOREAU'S JOURNALS

Odell Shepard

These extracts from Thoreau's Journals "reveal one of the most interesting minds we have produced." $3.00

"The Biography of America
GEORGE W. BELLOW'S
HIS LITHOGRAPHS

With an Introduction by THOMAS BEER

ALL of the one hundred ninety-five lithographs, from the widely popular "Stag at Sharkey's" to "The Last Count" from a unique copy. "He had wit, and never drew or painted without it," says Eugene Speicher in a tribute written for this volume. "Here is the biography of America," says Thomas Beer in a biographical-critical introduction, one of its author's most brilliant essays. The volume contains a detailed explanatory Index.

Quarto, natural linen stamped in black, with gilt top; printed on Dejonge Art Mat; the text set in Poliphilus. $15.00

The Biography of Aframerica
NEGRO DRAWINGS

By MIGUEL COVARRUBIAS

Author of The Prince of Wales and other Famous Americans

With a Preface by RALPH BARTON and an Introduction by FRANK CROWNSHIELD

FIFTY-SEVEN drawings (eight in color) of life in Harlem today. "With an incorruptible pencil in his hand," says Mr. Barton, "the fellow inspects God's works with an impudent and critical eye." "Covarrubias," says Mr. Crownshield, "was the first important artist in America to bestow upon our Negro anything like reverent attention." Both the impudence and the reverence surcharge these drawings.

$7.50

Two art books of the first importance

TWENTY DRAWINGS

By KAHLIL GIBRAN

Author of The Prophet

Drawings which confute most other symbolism in two ways: first, by their sheer clarity; secondly, by their sufficiency as drawings, regardless of their profound thought.

$2.50

FIFTY DRAWINGS

By ALASTAIR

Introduction by CARL VAN VECHTEN

A generous and representative selection from the work of a draughtsman whose gift for creative decoration is comparable to that of Aubrey Beardsley. Limited edition made by The Curwen Press, London.

$20.00

At every bookshop

ALFRED A. KNOPF

In Canada, from The Macmillan Company of

PUBLISHER, N. Y.

Canada, Ltd., St. Martin's House, Toronto

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

I am going to buy Trader Horn today! I shall sail beyond the sun... Wildest Africa will be my home, swift rivers my daily course, ivory, apes and peacocks my stock in trade, and cannibals my blood brothers... Romance will run amuck. A President of the United States, sight-seeing his way through Africa, will order his prize gorilla from me. (What matter if I ship him instead the pickled body of an old trader who wanted to be buried at home?...) I shall see the mighty Cecil Rhodes get drunk on prickly pear brandy and, as part of the day's work, I shall snatch him from the hungry crocodiles. I shall watch my native friends toss their useless grandmothers into the jungle torrents, laughing riotously during the sacred rites... With my gallant school-mate "Little Peru" I shall rescue the fair haired octoroon Nina T-- daughter of a British peer from the josh house where she is imprisoned and worshipped as a goddess. I shall level off the sand, crying "Your shout" upon the swishing waters of the forest, and toss a gold piece for her hand... In places marked unexplored on the latest maps of the Ivory Coast, I shall see voodoo mysteries unveiled... With spear-heads and crouching tribesmen, with lions and lady missionaries, I shall have my fill of beauty and terror. I shall live adventure, the real thing. I am going to read Trader Horn tonight.

"TRADER HORN" being the Life and Works of Alfred Aloysius Horn, set down by himself at the age of seventy-three, with a foreword by ETHELREDA LEWIS. Now word by John Galsworthy. Now in its seventy-fifth thousand. $4.00 at all book-stores. Published by Simon and Schuster, 37 West 57th Street, New York

Trader Horn in the flesh. Camera portrait by Leon Lerson, Johannesburg. © by Ethelreda Lewis.

WHY MEN HATE WOMEN

By Gelett Burgess

The author of "The Purple Cow" in his funniest — and most biting — satirical mood. Illustrated by Herb Roth. $1.50

CRUDE

A NOVEL

By Robert Hyde

Oil—youth—the day's work—modern love—these are the materials of this finely drawn study of four young people, by a new writer of sophistication and unique understanding. A novel that reeks of the soil, showing a corner of America, yet casting a searching light on the whole country. $2.50

YANKEE-DOODLE-DOO

By Grenville Vernon

A collection of songs of the early American stage. Rollicking, robust lyrics and music; illustrated from old playbills, contemporary cartoons, etc.

$5.00

CONCAC HILL

A novel of dough-boys and nurses behind the lines in France, with love taking the place of shrapnel through force of boredom with mud, official red tape and inaction. "As humorous, but less profane, than What Price Glory."—N. Y. Herald-Tribune. $2.50

By Charles Divine

"Books that are different"

A great German novel, now available in English. From its first part was made the Emil Jannings' film, Variety; here the tragic story is continued "even unto the second generation." "Lofty and sustained . . . the characters are human beings, powerfully portrayed."—N. Y. Times. $2.50

By Felix Hollaender

THE
S
I N
S
OF
THE
F
A T
H
E
R
S

The Collectors'
Library

DOLLS

By Esther Singleton
The first complete history of dolls, images, and fetishes. Beautifully illustrated. $7.50

TOWARDS A NEW ARCHITECTURE

By Le Corbusier
The most daring of European architects looks into the future. Many illustrations. $6.00

THE AFRICAN SAGA

By Blaise Cendrars

The whole body of African negro folk-lore has been tapped for this exhaustive compilation, the first presentation of the culture-sources of a race emerging from its previous obscurity. Fascinating both for the general reader and the student. $5.00

At all bookstores

Contemporary American Artists

ALBERT STERNER

His Life and His Art
64 full page reproductions of his most characteristic work, with critical and biographical text by Ralph Flint. $7.50

BEYOND THE BUND

By Philip Kerby
The real China — its high-lights and shadows, its inscrutable people — in a book that pierces the veil. $2.50

PAYSON & CLARKE LTD • 6 E. 53 ST. • NEW YORK

"Give me not millions," cried Mitya, in The Brothers Karamazov, "but answers to my questions."

IN the last eighteen months more than one hundred and seventy-five thousand *Americans have voiced this ageless seeking, and turned to The Story of Philosophy by WILL DURANT for guidance . . . "Most of us," they confess with WILL DURANT, "have known some golden days in the June of life when philosophy was in fact what PLATO calls it, 'that dear delight,' when the love of a modestly elusive truth seemed more glorious, incomparably, than the lust for the ways of the flesh and the dross of the world; and there is always some wistful remnant in us of that early wooing of wisdom."

ONE hundred and seventy-five thousand minds, here and now, have shared BROWNING'S conviction: "Life has meaning—to find it is my meat and drink." . . . In one hundred and seventy-five thousand lives the moment has come when this timeless affirmation became inevitable: "We want to understand. We want to seize the value and perspective of passing things, and so to pull ourselves up out of the maelstrom of daily circumstance. . . . We want to know that the little things are little, and the big things big, before it is too late. . . . We want to learn to laugh in the face of the inevitable, to smile even at the looming of death."

ONE hundred and seventy-five thousand hearts have been quickened by the adventurous and ennobling intimacy with the pioneer thinkers from SOCRATES to SANTAYANA. . . . Scholais and laymen, men of letters and men of affairs, the lowly and the mighty, they have talked with PLATO, sat at his banquets, dreamed his dreams, and taken inspiration from the majesty of his ideas. They have held concourse with LORD BACON as he took all knowledge for his province, and rang the bell that brought the wits of Europe together. . . . They have communed with SPINOZA, drunk with divinity. . . . They have laughed and fought with VOLTAIRE. They have dismantled the sorry scheme of things with SCHOPENHAUER and NIETZSCHE, and pieced it together with SPENCER and BERGSON. . . . In our own time they have pondered with William James and BERTRAND RUSSELL and sought light and growth with JOHN DEWEY. They have walked with kings . . . One hundred and seventy-five thousand *men and women have read The Story of Philosophy. Have you?

The Story of Philosophy is published in three different formats:
(a) Regular Cloth Edition $5.00—(b) Thin Paper Cloth $5.00—(c) Thin Paper Leather $7.50

WILL DURANT
author of
THE STORY OF PHILOSOPHY
and TRANSITION
A Mental Autobiography

The Figures that Tell the Story of THE STORY OF PHILOSOPHY

First Edition	May 29, 1926	Sold Out
Second Edition	June 8, 1926	Sold Out
Third Edition	June 17, 1926	Sold Out
Fourth Edition	June 28, 1926	Sold Out
Fifth Edition	July 9, 1926	Sold Out
Sixth Edition	July 13, 1926	Sold Out
Seventh Edition	July 22, 1926	Sold Out
Eighth Edition	August 14, 1926	Sold Out
Ninth Edition	August 19, 1926	Sold Out
Tenth Edition	Sept. 15, 1926	Sold Out
Eleventh Edition	Nov. 5, 1926	Sold Out
Twelfth Edition	Nov. 12, 1926	Sold Out
Thirteenth Edition	Nov. 26, 1926	Sold Out
Fourteenth Edition	Dec. 13, 1926	Sold Out
Fifteenth Edition	Jan. 14, 1927	Sold Out
Sixteenth Edition	Feb. 20, 1927	Sold Out
Seventeenth Edition	Feb. 28, 1927	Sold Out
Eighteenth Edition	April 13, 1927	Sold Out
Nineteenth Edition	July 21, 1927	Sold Out
Twentieth Edition	Sept. 23, 1927	Sold Out
Twenty-first Edition	Oct. 20, 1927	Sold Out
Twenty-second Edition	—	One Press

A Total of 182,000 Copies

NOTE: Each new edition is now larger than the first, second, third and fourth editions combined. It has required two printing plants and two binderies, in Binghamton, New York, and in New York City, working in extra shifts, night and day, to turn out sufficient books to keep up with the demand of book sellers and book buyers.

* NOTE: This figure is an extremely conservative estimate, for it allows only one reader for each of the 175,000 copies of The Story of Philosophy bought in America since the book was published. It does not include the readers of the British, French, German, Swedish, Czech-Slovakian and other foreign editions.

589 pages, 21 full page illustrations,
$5. At all bookstores

New Crowell Books

BLACKBEARD'S TREASURE

By T. E. Oertel

A tale of piracy on the high seas, told with all the sparkle of fiction, yet based closely upon the actual exploits of the noted buccaneer, Blackbeard, or Captain Teach, who harried the coast of Carolina in Colonial times. The author thoroughly knows his locale and presents a colorful picture. Full of action yet with much of the charm of style of "Treasure Island."

Illustrated by Mabel Pugh, $2.00

Three Books for Resourceful Boys and Girls

BOY'S BOOK OF EXPERIMENTS

By A. Frederick Collins

One of the most practical books this popular author has ever prepared. It shows by text and illustration just how to do many things in chemistry, physics, electricity, radio, etc., and largely by home-made equipment.

Illustrated, $2.00

SUPPOSE WE DO SOMETHING ELSE

By Imogen Clark

A fine companion book to the author's popular "Suppose We Play." Here, young folks are shown things of a more useful sort, such as how to make cakes and candies, also little gifts for Christmas, birthdays, and other occasions.

$2.00

THE BOY'S BUSY BOOK

By Chelsea Fraser

Every wide-awake boy will like this book, which tells how to make things with his knife, and other simple tools. Full diagrams accompany the text. 400 pages, profusely illustrated, 8vo.

$2.50

HEROES OF THE AIR

By Chelsea Fraser

The most complete story of aviation in one volume that has yet appeared. Begins with the first feeble flights, and ends (in the Fourth Edition just ready) with the sensational trans-Atlantic voyages of Lindbergh, Byrd and Chamberlin, in the summer of 1927.

Profusely illustrated. 504 pages, 8vo. 34 illustrations. $2.00

Three Books for Lovers of Literature

NATURE LOVER'S KNAPSACK

By Edwin Osgood Grover

A delightful anthology of nature verse from many writers, both English and American. A book that will appeal to every reader who feels the lure of the out of doors.

$2.50

THE SHAPING OF ENGLISH LITERATURE

By Amy Cruse

A treatment of English Literature from the standpoint of the reader rather than that of the writer. A comprehensive outline from the days of the Saxons to the end of the eighteenth century.

32 Illustrations, $3.50

A CELTIC ANTHOLOGY

By Grace Rhys (Editor)

The fullest anthology ever compiled covering the literature of Ireland, Scotland, and Wales. Contains more little-known than well-known selections and is full of literary surprises.

$2.50

THE BOOK OF FAMOUS QUEENS

By Lydia Hoyt Farmer

A new edition, entirely revised, of this favorite book, with new chapters added. Contains interesting stories of Semiramis, Cleopatra, Zenobia, Margaret of Anjou, Isabelle of Spain, Catharine of Aragon, Catherine de Medici, Queen Elizabeth, Mary Stuart, Maria Theresa, Catherine II of Russia, Marie Antoinette, Josephine, Victoria, Eugenie, and Tzu Hsi, late Empress Dowager of China.

16 Illustrations, $2.50

Send for Illustrated Fall List

THOMAS Y. CROWELL CO
393 Fourth Avenue New York.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

175,000 REASONS WHY "TRANSITION" WILL DURANT'S NEW MENTAL AUTOBIOGRAPHY IS THE BIG BOOK OF THE YEAR!

BECAUSE

TRANSITION, this new mental autobiography by WILL DURANT, just published, has been awaited by the 175,000 readers for whom WILL DURANT made philosophy live and dance and sing ~ ~ Because the advance sale of TRANSITION was exactly ten times as large as the advance sale of THE STORY OF PHILOSOPHY ~ ~ Because in TRANSITION, according to Ernest Sutherland Bates in "The Saturday Review of Literature," "Dr. Durant voices the deepest philosophic urge of his age ~ ~ Durant writes of Durant as interestingly as he writes of others" ~ ~ Because (we still quote from America's leading critical weekly) "in TRANSITION there are certain passages which may well bear comparison for sheer literary power with anything in contemporary literature ~ ~ All in all, TRANSITION is to be enjoyed, then pondered, then again enjoyed" ~ ~ Because, according to JOHN HAYNES HOLMES, writing in "Books" of "The New York Herald Tribune," "Dr. Durant here does for himself what in the STORY OF PHILOSOPHY he has done with such brilliant success for Plato, Kant, Spencer, Croce, and the rest of the great philosophers" ~ ~ Because (we still quote from John Haynes Holmes). "TRANSITION is a thrilling story—in many ways a heroic one. Durant tells it with an elan which is contagious. I picked it up with groans on a night when I was sick in bed with a headache, sore throat and 102 degrees fever and finished it with shouts before the bed lamp was extinguished."

TRANSITION, A Mental Autobiography, by WILL DURANT—$3.00 everywhere
SIMON AND SCHUSTER, Publishers, 37 West 57th Street, New York City

WILL DURANT
author of
The Story of Philosophy and Transition

FLASHES

from TRANSITION
A Mental Biography
The new book by
WILL DURANT

"AFTER all, what does it matter what price we pay for love?"

"I THRILL yet at the mention of His name, and hunger yet for the ideal life. He wishes mankind to live; if to love Him and hear Him gladly is to be a Christian, then, sceptic and pagan though I be, I am a Christian, too, and Christ is still my God."

"In the inexhaustible activity of the atom, in the endless resourcefulness of plants, in the teeming fertility of animals, in the hunger and movement of infants, in the laughter and play of children, in the love and devotion of youth, in the restless ambition of fathers and the lifelong sacrifice of mothers, in the undiscourageable researches of scientists and the sufferings of genius, in the crucifixion of prophets and the martyrdom of saints—in all things I saw the passion of life for growth and greatness, the drama of everlasting creation."

DISTINGUISHED CENTURY BOOKS

The vast pageant of American civilization staged along the banks of the Father of Waters.

FATHER MISSISSIPPI

By LYLE SAXON

A gorgeous and dramatic presentation of the great human story entwined in the history of the Mississippi River from the time of De Soto to the present day. Here are vivid pictures of intrepid explorers, plantation life, show boat romance, moonlit levees, and even of the unprecedented tragedy of the recent flood. FATHER MISSISSIPPI is a brilliant cross-section of the American story.

Illustrated, $5.00

THOSE QUARRELSOME BONAPARTES

By ROBERT GORDON ANDERSON

A rare and penetrating story of Napoleon and his confreres, executed with glamorous pageantry and charm. $2.50

DESERT WINDS

By HAFSA

A remarkable interpretation of a world religion—Islam, and the psychology of a great race—the Arab. Illustrated, $3.50

THIS SMOKING WORLD

By A. E. HAMILTON

A fascinating study of a custom which is conquering the human race. Illustrated with many beautiful and whimsical drawings. $2.50

BUGLES IN THE NIGHT

By BARRY BENEFIELD

Author of "The Chicken-Wagon Family," etc.

"Mr. Benefield appeals to the heart, and reaches it . . . A romantic story, filled with chuckles."—Phila. Public Ledger. "Mr. Benefield has written sympathetically an original story."—Boston Transcript. "The man has charm. He tells a story uncommonly well."—N. Y. Times. $2.00

THE SILENT FORCE

By T. MORRIS LONGSTRETH

A rich, dramatic history of the Mounted Police of Canada, its organization and personnel, and the amazing experiences of its courageous men.

Illustrated, $4.00

The glamour and enchantment, the magic and mystery of "Little Old New York."

HIGHLIGHTS of MANHATTAN

By WILL IRWIN and E. H. SUYDAM

Here a brilliant writer and a skilled artist collaborate to produce the greatest panorama of Manhattan of all time. It takes you into the high places, the furtive corners and the hidden regions of Bagdad on the Subway as it is today. Beautifully illustrated. $6.00

THE CENTURY CO. Publishers of Enduring Books

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

By HAROLD LAMB

GENGHIS KHAN

The Emperor of All Men

"It is fascinating, not only in the body of its text, but in foreword, afterword and supporting notes." Harry Salpeter in the New York World.

"A genuine thriller . . . I wish I could do more than suggest what an absorbing book this is."
—Herschel Brickell in the New York Evening Post.
Illustrated. $3.50

By A. D. HOWDEN SMITH

COMMODORE VANDERBILT

An Epic of American Achievement

"An arresting story of an arresting figure in our history, the portrait of a truly great man done in the truly grand manner, fresh and lively and full of color. By all means the most unusual attempt in American letters to give us a picture of a man rather than an obituary."
—Brooklyn Eagle.
Illustrated. $5.00

By JAMES BRANCH CABELL

SOMETHING ABOUT EVE

A Comedy of Fig-leaves

"A tale which is told a little more expertly and a little more beautifully than even Mr. Cabell has ever told a tale before."
—Frances Newman in the New York Evening Post.

"More than a novel . . . it is a prose poem built on a gigantic scale."
—Edwin Bjorkman in the New York Sun. $2.50

NOTHING BUT THE EARTH. By Paul Morand
A smiling and disillusioned chronicler. Paul Morand follows the trail of twentieth century confusion around the world. Illustrated. $3.00

STRANGE WOMAN. By Elmer Davis
The story of a woman of forty. "Admirably done, subtle, brilliant, clever."
—Philadelphia Inquirer. $2.00

LILY-IRON. By Mary Biggs
A first novel worthy of inclusion with the best of our native literature. $2.00

THE GIRL IN THE GLASS CAGE. By George Kibbe Turner
One of the most dramatic stories ever written about the American small town. $2.00

GREAT SHORT NOVELS OF THE WORLD

Edited with Introduction and Notes by Barrett H. Clark

A collection of complete tales chosen from the literatures of all periods and all countries.
Over 1,000 pages, $5.00 Half Morocco, boxed. $10.00

ROBERT M. MCBRIDE & COMPANY ~ 7 West 16th Street ~ New York

PUTNAM BOOKS

Louis XVIII

By J. Lucas-Dubreton

Author of "Samuel Pepys: A study in Miniature"

The last remnant of Bourbon royalty, standing out as a lonely figure on a troubled horizon.
$3.50

Francis Joseph

By Eugene Bagger

Author of "Eminent Europeans"

A masterful analysis which pierces to the bottom of the soul of Francis Joseph and illumines the hidden springs of his thought and action.

Illustrated
$5.00

Robespierre

By Hilaire Belloc

Author of "Marie Antoinette"

"Hilaire Belloc, in his fluent, readable way, has created a living portrait which we feel is a true approximation of an elusive and unusual personality."
—N. Y. Evening Post. $5.00

Talleyrand

By Anna Bowman Dodd

The life of a suave and elegant diplomat who survived six changes in government.

Illustrated.
$5.00

Camels!

By Dan Streeter

Author of "Denatured Africa"

A modern Mark Twain explores the strange and savage peace of the Sudan. He cam-eleers his light-hearted way through Africa and recounts his amazing adventures and misadventures.

Illustrated.
$2.50

BISMARCK

The TRILOGY of a Fighter
By
EMIL LUDWIG

A group of three Plays:
KING AND PEOPLE, UNION, DISMISSAL
Price probably $3.75

Twice suppressed by the Kaiser
Basing his material on the forbidden memoirs of Bismarck, the author has written three plays that reveal astonishing truths about his hero, differing from the conception of the Iron Chancellor with which we have become familiar. The Kaiser twice attempted to stop the production of the play Dismissal but it was performed over a thousand times all over Germany.

Across Asia's Snows and Deserts

By William J. Morden

The story of a great adventure on the Marco Polo trail from Bombay to Peking by motor, on foot, horseback, camels, wagons and sleighs. $5.00

"We"

By Col. Charles A. Lindbergh

Foreword by

Ambassador Myron T. Herrick

The national best seller. Col. Lindbergh's own story of his life and air experiences.
Illustrated. $5.00

Caste

By Cosmo Hamilton

The romance of a love pilloried by modern America's opposing racial aristocracies — Jewish and Gentile.
$2.00

Wilhelm Hohenzollern

The Last of the Kaisers

"A dramatic biography so powerful seldom gets into print in any language."

—New York Times

Illustrated. $5.00

Certain Rich Men

By Meade Minnigerode

Author of "The Fabulous Forties"

"Done with the sure touch of the historian who has left no stone unturned."

$3.50 —N. Y. Evening Post

Dragon Lizards of Komodo

By W. Douglas Burden

An expedition to a lost world of the Dutch East Indies. The thrilling account of a search for giant lizards.

Illustrated.
$5.00

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

New York

London

LIPPINCOTT BOOKS FOR GIFTS

NAPOLEON, THE LOVER

Startling, almost sensational, disclosures that bring to life a new and absorbingly human Napoleon

NAPOLEON AND HIS WOMEN FRIENDS

By GERTRUDE ARETZ

Translated from the German by EDEN & CEDAR PAUL

Fascinating in the extreme are the stories—gay, intimate, intensely personal—of his many love affairs, of his hours of passion, beguilement and tender dalliance. No Napoleonic library is complete without this book, which is compiled from indisputable historic sources.

16 Illustrations. $5.00

THEY CALL IT LOVE

By

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

A novel of modern manners. "Romance sings through the book like a melody."—Boston Globe. $2.00

THE CAP OF YOUTH

The Love Romance of

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

By JOHN A. STEUART

"A glowing addition to the personal literature of genius. There is fire in it."—Phila. Inquirer. $2.50

Old Trails and Roads in Penn's Land

By JOHN T. FARIS

Author of "Old Roads Out of Philadelphia," etc.

Fascinating "tours of discovery" to out-of-the-way corners by one who holds a pre-eminent place among American travel book writers. 62 Illustrations. $5.00

The Practical Book of Italian, Spanish and Portuguese Furniture

By HAROLD DONALDSON EBERLEIN and ROGER WEARNE RAMSDELL
(Lippincott's Practical Book Series)

The first book on Portuguese furniture, and the first of moderate cost on Spanish and Italian furniture, covering the many phases from the Renaissance to the early Nineteenth century inclusive.

374 Illustrations. $10.00

Beauty and Health

By LOIS LEEDS and HILDA KAJI

Foreword by DOROTHY DIX

A book that will bring to light the beauty that is in all women. It covers so many points—and each point so minutely—that every woman will find in it just the help she needs. 84 Illustrations. $2.50

That Mind of Yours

By DANIEL B. LEARY, Ph.D.

The most interesting story of today—the story of YOUR OWN SELF—told in popular, non-technical style. This compact volume gives the cream of the New Psychology. $1.75

Good Times for Boys and Girls

JANNY

By JANE ABBOTT. Here's another gay, spontaneous, true-to-nature story by the ever-popular author of "Martha the Seventh." "You'll like it."—American Girl. 4 Illustrations. $1.75

RED BEARD OF VIRGINIA

By RUPERT SARGENT HOLLAND. A stirring tale of adventure in Jamestown by the favorite writer of American historical stories for boys. 4 Illustrations. $2.00

ACROSS THE SEVEN SEAS

By E. KEBLE CHATTERTON.

4 Illustrations. $1.75

NOLICHUCKY JACK

By JOHN T. FARIS.

4 Illustrations. $2.00

IN THE RANKS OF OLD HICKORY

By EDWIN L. SABIN.
(The American Trail Blazers.)

4 Illustrations. $1.75

STORIES ALL CHILDREN LOVE

27 Famous child favorites with color illustrations so real and full of life that they will at once kindle the child's fancy. Now this year—GRITLI'S CHILDREN by JOHANNA SPYRI. Ask to see them. Each $1.50

Philadelphia

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY

London

lxiii

BOBBS-MERRILL BOOKS

Gentleman Johnny Burgoyne

Misadventures of an English General in the Revolution

By F. J. Hudleston

If you want to read one of the best books of a startlingly distinguished season, here it is. The most interesting current biography.

—Geo. Currie, Brooklyn Eagle. Illustrated, $5.00

Adam and Eve

Though he knew better

By John Erskine

The original triangle in an attempt to straighten things out. By the author of Galahad and Private Life of Helen of Troy. $2.50

Prohibition and Christianity

By John Erskine

This and other Paradoxes of the American Spirit are discussed with wisdom, wit and charm. $2.50

first among native novels

JULIA PETERKIN'S BLACK APRIL

This year the laurels for first place among native novels go to Julia Peterkin. It is an uncommon, notable novel in both craft and substance.

—N. Y. Times.
$2.50

Charles Darwin

The Man and His Warfare

By Henshaw Ward

Shows what made Darwin different from all other men and gave to him his glorious place in science. $5.00

The Higher Foolishness

*By David
Starr Jordan*

The pseudo-sciences reduced to the deliciously absurd by a great scientist. $2.50

Being Well-Born

By Michael F. Guyer

The best book on heredity and race improvement in the world.

—Albert Edward Wiggam.
Illustrated, $5.00

The Woodcutter's House

By Robert Nathan

Certainly the most charming, beautiful and mature snatch of fantasy in years. Deft, delicate, a perfect work.—Lewis Browne. $2.00

The Next Age of Man

By Albert Edward Wiggam

Past, present and future in the evolution of man. By the author of The Fruit of the Family Tree and The New Decalogue of Science. $3.00

Exploring the Universe

By Henshaw Ward

Author of Evolution for John Doe
One of the best books for the layman about the marvelous discoveries of recent science. —New York Post. $3.50

Publishers The Bobbs-Merrill Company Indianapolis

MACY = MASIOUS

BOOKS AS GIFTS

THE HORNED SHEPHERD

by Edgar Jepson

woodcuts by Wilfred Jones

The loveliest of the winter's books. All writers of popular fiction hanker to write a serious classic, but Mr. Jepson has done it. An Arcadian idyll of subtlety and charm and sophistication, this book is illustrated lavishly by Wilfred Jones. The first edition is printed on rag paper from the original woodcuts and hand-set type. $5

THE PAUL STREET BOYS

by Ferenc Molnar

Fresh as a spring breeze, this whimsical and ellin novel is the best work of the famous author of "Lilioni". $2

THE BLOODY POET

by Desider
Kostolanyi

A novel about Nerz, a fascinating, fine and enthralling story with a preface by Thomas Mann. $2

THE DEVIL OF PEI-LING

by Herbert Asbury

"It is simply gripping: a story to make the hair rise and the flesh creep. Buy it and see"—New York World $2

THE RITZ CARLTONS

by Fillmore Hyde

The intimate story of the private life of Mr. and Mrs. Carlton, very pathetically illustrated by Rea Irvin. $2

ALFRED E. SMITH: A CRITICAL STUDY

by Henry F. Pringle

"Singularly fair and decidedly enthralling"—Heywood Broun. "Honest and caustic and refreshing"—Oswald Garrison Villard. "Intelligent, impartial, engrossing, informative"—N.Y. Times. 3rd ed. $3.50

CHECK LIST OF GOOD BOOKS

 DOUG AND MARY AND OTHERS by Allene Talmey. A keen and stimulating book of studies of the movie idols, with twenty-four wood-cut portraits by Zadig. $2

 SAMUEL SEWALL'S DIARY "It's priceless. We don't know when we had more pleasure than in reading the confidences of this doughty old puritan."—The Buffalo Times (An American Bookshelf) $2.50

 COASTER CAPTAIN by James B. Connolly. "When Connolly does a novel of the sea, the salt air comes to the nostrils." Phila. Inquirer $2

 A HISTORY OF THE LIFE AND DEATH OF GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON by Parson Weems. The first, easily the most popular, and certainly the least critical of the biographies of Washington, this droll book will amuse all people. (An American Bookshelf) $2.50

MACY = MASIOUS

551 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK CITY

The Ten Princes

Translated from the Sanskrit

By ARTHUR W. RYDER

How to live wisely and well was an art well understood by the gay and sophisticated folk of seventh-century India. This adventuresome, exotic tale about them is undiluted entertainment. $2.00

More Contemporary Americans

By PERCY HOLMES BOYNTON

Amid the prevailing gloomy preoccupation with American culture Mr. Boynton chooses to say a word in its defense. His more optimistic interpretation of the current situation is based on sound, discriminating judgment. $2.50

Jesus

A New Biography

By SHIRLEY JACKSON CASE

Not "blasphemous" or "silly" but the most straightforward, stimulating account since Renan of the real Jesus of history. $3.00

Chinese Painting

By JOHN C. FERGUSON

With a full appreciation of the Chinese point of view Mr. Ferguson interprets for a modern, occidental world the paintings of an ancient, oriental civilization. Beautifully illustrated with fifty-seven plates in colotype. $12.50

The Old Testament

An American Translation

By J. M. P. SMITH, THEOPHILE J. MEEK, LEROY WATERMAN, AND
ALEX R. GORDON

If you have never read the Bible, or if you have—no matter how many times—this fresh translation will bring it to you with new meaning and emphasis.

Cloth $7.50. Leather $10.00

New Essays

By Oliver Goldsmith

Edited by RONALD S. CRANE

A new Goldsmith first edition. Here are eighteen previously unidentified essays—the largest single addition to the canon of Goldsmith essays that has been made since 1798. $3.00

Plays for Three Players

By CHARLES RANN KENNEDY

Each of these three plays is an idea dramatized. "The Chastening," "The Admiral," and "The Salutation" are fine and original additions to the drama as it is heard or read. $2.50

The Nature of the World and of Man

Critics have united in calling this one of the finest and most engrossing popularizations of current science in existence. It is a clear, connected, reasonable explanation of all the physical world and man's place in it. $5.00

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS

GIFT BOOKS FROM CHAPEL HILL

Congaree Sketches

By E. C. L. Adams

With an introduction by Paul Green. Authentic, vivid, untouched-up sketches of negro life in the South Carolina swamps. Trade edition, $2.00. Autographed edition, $5.00

Southern Exposure

By Peter Mitchel Wilson

The pleasant story of a "Southern-exposed" child, youth and man, with amusing little glimpses of Certain People of Importance. The author is the present Senior Democratic member of the Secretarial Staff of the Senate. $2.50

The Negro and His Songs

Negro Workaday Songs

*By Howard W. Odum
Guy B. Johnson*

The sources of the blues, songs of the lonesome road, songs of jail, of white man and captain, songs of the bad man; spirituals, work songs and "socials;" negro songs in their unadorned folk form. Postpaid, each, $3.00

Modern French Art

By Russell Potter

Arranged primarily for group study, but an excellent guide to individual approach. With foreword (but intended to be read), bibliography, and a note on modernity in contemporary verse. $1.00

Can a Man Be a Christian Today?

By W. L. Poteat

A biologist looks at religion—a religionist looks at biology—and what happens to the will to believe. "It is," says the New York World, "the most cogent and winning statement ever made on the religion of a scientist." Postpaid, $1.50

Studies in Recent Aesthetic

By Katherine Gilbert

The riddle of beauty, with some remarks on the ugly and not a little about the funny; a survey of contemporary theories of æsthetic. The doctrines of Bergson, Bosanquet, Croce, Lalo, and Santayana are discussed with so acute a sense of criticism that the chapters devoted to them amount to original contributions in the respective fields of these philosophers' interests. $1.50

JUST OUT!

America and French Culture, 1750-1848

By Howard Mumford Jones

The book that has been expectantly awaited by scholars in the field and those who know that in the work of this author are to be found scholarship, style and a fresh point of view. A pioneer in its field in presenting the general American attitude toward things French in the hundred years of our closest contact. No one has before put all the pieces together—taking into account the sum total of the relationships of the two countries, even to eating and drinking. Postpaid, $4.50

THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA PRESS

NEW OXFORD BOOKS

THE OXFORD BOOK OF AMERICAN VERSE

18th to 20th Centuries

Chosen and Edited by BLISS CARMAN $3.75

The Oxford Book of American Verse, a companion to the famous Oxford Book of English Verse, contains the best from the whole field of American poetry.

AMERICAN MYSTERY STORIES

Selected with an Introduction

by CAROLYN WELLS $1.50

The best mystery stories by American writers from Poe to Dreiser. Ghosts tangible or evanescent, mysteries never wholly solved, and horrors only dreamed of, combine to make this collection a thing of thrilling terror and creepy delight.

AMERICAN DETECTIVE STORIES

Selected with an Introduction

by CAROLYN WELLS $1.50

The best detective stories by American writers from Poe to Gelett Burgess, representing crime and detection at its best, from the criminal lawyer to the clever young amateur.

INDIA'S PAST

By A. A. MACDONELL $3.75

"An excellent introduction to the literature, religions, architecture and philosophies of India."—The American Mercury.
"The last word on the subject."—Review of Reviews.

THE LEGACY OF ISRAEL

Planned by the late ISRAEL ABRAHAM and Edited by EDWYN R. BEVAN and

CHARLES SINGER $4.00

An illuminating and readable account of Jewish culture and traditions, for the general reader.

ENVIRONMENT AND RACE

By GRIFFITH TAYLOR $7.50

A study of the evolution, migration, settlement, and status of the races of man, based directly upon modern research.

HISTORICAL TRIALS

By the late SIR JOHN MACDONELL

Edited by R. W. LEE, with a Preface by the Right Hon. LORD SHAW of Dunfermline $3.75

"Here the reader will find discussed, with acuteness and in delightful manner, displaying great reserves of knowledge, some of the greatest problems of history."—The London Times.

THE CONQUEST OF THE AIR

By C. L. M. BROWN $1.00

A brief account, simply told, of the development of aviation. With many illustrations.

BENEDETTO CROCE

An Autobiography

Translated from the Italian

by R. G. COLLINGWOOD $2.00

With a Preface by J. A. SMITH
"In form, types, margins, binding, this book is perfectly beautiful and collectors will note it with an eagle eye."—Observer.

THE NEW GERMANY

Three lectures by ERNST JÄCKH

With an Introduction by

ALFRED ZIMMERN $2.00

A clear and well-defined picture of political Germany since 1914.

THE ARCHITECT IN HISTORY

By MARTIN S. BRIGGS $3.75

An historical account of the profession of architecture, with biographical detail of some of the greatest of its members from the earliest time to the present day.

ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN IN CONCRETE

By T. P. BENNETT $10.00

Concrete as a building material assumes ever-increasing importance. This is the first comprehensive and authoritative volume of its sort that deals with such an important subject. With one hundred full-page illustrations from photographs.

THE OXFORD DESK SET

Comprises the Dictionary of Modern English Usage by H. W. FOWLER, and the Concise Oxford Dictionary by F. G. and H. W. FOWLER. The Set, with case to match, $7.50.

A handy and indispensable reference work for those who take pride in their speech and writing.

At all booksellers or from the publishers.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

AMERICAN BRANCH 35 WEST 32ND STREET NEW YORK CITY

EMIL LUDWIG

Genius and Character

Fascinating and masterful studies of nineteen men of undoubted genius: Frederick the Great, Bismarck, Wilson, Lenin, Da Vinci, Voltaire, Shakespeare, Rembrandt, Byron, Goethe, Balzac, and eight others.

Illustrated, $3.50

The book about "Al" Smith

NORMAN HAPGOOD
HENRY MOSKOWITZ

Up from the City Streets

Illustrated, $2.50

ABRAHAM
LINCOLN

By
Carl Sandburg

The complete text of the 2 vol., $10.00 edition, here in 1 vol. Limited edition. $3.00

ASPECTS OF THE NOVEL

By
E. M. Forster

The Clark Lectures at Cambridge for 1927, by the author of "A Passage to India." $2.50

THE LIFE OF TIM HEALY

By
Liam O'Flaherty
A biography of the first Governor General of the Irish Free State. $3.75

"Admirable, learned, penetrating, well-written."—CARL BECKER

WHY STOP LEARNING?

By Dorothy Canfield
Fisher

A competent and illuminating description of the new conception of adult education. $2.00

THE REVOLUTIONARY
SPIRIT IN FRANCE AND AMERICA

By Bernard Fay

A study of moral and intellectual relations between France and the United States at the end of the 18th Century. Translated by RAMON GUTHRIE. $5.00

HARCOURT, BRACE AND COMPANY

383 Madison Ave., N. Y.

BLACK STREAM

By Nathalie
Colby

"Better than
'Green Forest.'"
N. Y. Herald Tribune. $2.50

KNOCK 4 TIMES

By Margaret
Irwin

"Not since Cyrano, a hero quite so delightfully tragic." *Boston
Transcript.* $2.50

ADVEN-TURES
IN ARABIA

By
W. B. Seabrook

"Entrancing."
Boston Transcript.
Illustrated, $3.00

CARL
SAND-
BURG,
author of
"Abraham Lincoln,"
etc.

The Ideal
Gift for Christmas

The
AMERICAN SONGBAG

by
Carl
Sandburg

A collection of 250 songs, ballads, ditties, brought together from all regions of America. The music includes not merely airs and melodies, but complete harmonizations or piano accompaniments. It is an All-American affair, marshaling the genius of thousands of original singing Americans.

Here is a permanent contribution to American literature—a book that will be a joy forever.

Illustrated, $7.50

VENTURE'S END

By Karin
Michaelis

A brilliant Danish novel in which a splendid woman chooses motherhood but rejects marriage. $2.00

MOOR FIRES

By
E. H.
Young

"A book of truth and beauty."
Phila. Ledger.
$2.50

MOTHER INDIA

By Katherine
Mayo

"Vital in its world importance." Boston Herald. $3.75

Harcourt, Brace and Company

383 Madison Ave., New York

The American MERCURY

December 1927

OUR WHITE FOLKS

BY GEORGE S. SCHUYLER

NUMEROUS and ponderous tomes have been written about Negroes by white folks. With a pontifical air they rush into print on the slightest provocation to tell the world all about the blackamoor. These writings range all the way from alarmist gabble about the Black Menace or the tragedy of the dark brethren suffocating in the midst of white civilization to sloppy sentimentalities by the lunatic fringe of Liberals and the mooney scions of Southern slaveholders who deplore the passing of Uncle Tom and Aunt Beckie, who knew how to "act properly" and did not offend them by being self-respecting or intelligent. This fervent scribbling has been going on for a dozen decades or more, until today the libraries and attics of the country are crammed with more books and papers on the Negro than on any other American group. With so much evidence of what the Nordic thinks of his black brother, no one need remain ignorant on the subject. And if one doesn't read one may learn his attitude and opinion by observing the various Jim-crow laws and other such exhibits throughout this glorious land.

We Ethiops, one gathers from this mass of evidence, are a childish, shiftless, immoral, primitive, incurably religious, genially incompetent, incredibly odoriferous, inherently musical, chronically excitable, mentally inferior people with pronounced homicidal tendencies. We are incapable of self-government or self-restraint, and irresponsible except when led by white folks. We possess a penchant for assaulting white females and an inordinate appetite for chicken, gin and watermelon. While it is finally and reluctantly admitted that we belong to the human race, we are accorded only the lowest position in the species, a notch or two above the great apes. We make good domestics but hopeless executives. Even at this late date, all coons look alike to the great majority of Nordic Americans, and even the highest type of Negro is under no consideration to be accorded a higher position than the lowest type of white. In short, from examining the bulk of the evidence, the impartial investigator must conclude that the Negro has almost a monopoly of all the more discreditable characteristics of mankind. But at the same time one is effusively informed that he is deeply loved and thoroughly understood, especially by his pork-skinned friends of Southern derivation.

As a result of this attitude of his pale neighbors, the lowly moke has about ten times as many obstacles to hurdle in the race of life as the average peckerwood. It is difficult enough to survive and prosper in this world under the best of conditions, but when one must face such an attitude on the part of those who largely control the means of existence, the struggle is great indeed. Naturally there is deep resentment and bitterness among the more intelligent Negroes, and there always has been. Nothing else could be expected from a people who confront a continuous barrage of insult and calumny and discrimination from the cradle to the grave. There are Negroes, of course, who publicly claim to love the white folks, but privately the great majority of them sing another tune. Even the most liberal blacks are always suspicious, and have to be on the alert not to do or say anything that will offend the superior race. Such an atmosphere is not conducive to great affection, except perhaps on the part of halfwits.

Is it generally known that large numbers of Negroes, though they openly whooped it up for Uncle Sam, would have shed no tears in 1917-18 if the armies of the Kaiser had by some miracle suddenly swooped down upon such fair cities as Memphis, Tenn., Waycross, Ga., or Meridian, Miss.? The Negro upper class, in press and pulpit, roared and sweated to keep the dinges in line by telling them how much the white folks would do to improve their status after the war if they would only be loyal, but the more enlightened Ethiops were frankly skeptical, a skepticism justified later on. On several occasions during that struggle for democracy I sounded out individual Sambos here and there, and was somewhat surprised to find many of them holding the view that it made no difference to them who won the war, since the Germans could hardly treat them any worse than the Nordics of the U. S. A., and might treat them a lot better. Any number of intelligent Negroes expressed the opinion under the breath that a good beating would be an excellent thing for the soul of America. Even some of the actual black soldiers were observed on occasion to indulge in cynical smirks and sarcastic exclamations during the reading of tracts from Mr. Creel's propaganda mill.

II

Of course the attitude of the Negro toward the Nordics varies with the locality he lives in, the conditions under which he lives, and the class to which he belongs. Traveling in the South, it is difficult to get the truth about race relations in a given community unless one is very painstaking. This is due to the fact that among both whites and blacks down there, there is a great deal of local patriotism, no matter how bad conditions may actually be. The whites will claim that their niggers are the best in the world and that those in all of the surrounding towns are gorillas, while the Ethiops will speak highly of their own white folks, but heap maledictions upon the heads of the crackers further down the line. It is always wise to let them talk themselves out of breath in praise of their particular community, and then inquire discreetly about the schools, the courts, the franchise, economic opportunities, civic improvements, health conditions, and so forth. As the Negroes discuss such things one begins to get an indication of their real feelings, which are seldom flattering to their townfolk of paler hue.

Curiously enough, the majority of Nordics seem to believe that all Negroes look upon them as some sort of demigods—as paragons of intelligence, efficiency, refinement and morality. No doubt they have arrived at this curious conclusion by observing how the blackamoors ape their appearance with skin whiteners and hair straighteners, and how they are given to disparaging the efforts and attainments of other Negroes. They have probably heard such Negroisms as "A nigger ain't nuthin'," "What more can you expect from a nigger?" and "Why don't you be like white folks?"

The Negro, it is true, is cynical and skeptical about his own, and often his castigations of his brethren are more devastating than any administered by the white folks. In this respect, he resembles his Jewish brother. But the crow is equally critical of his red-necked comrades. Only infrequently do the white folks perceive that this indirect flattery is a sort of combination of protective coloration, group discipline, and feeling of annoyance and futility. It does not in the majority of cases mean that the individual Negro they see in front of them thinks that they are his superiors—except in power.

If the Southern white, as is his wont, can with any justification trumpet to the world that he knows the Negro, the Aframerican can with equal or greater truth claim to have the inside information on the cracker. Knowing him so intimately, the black brother has no illusions about either his intelligence, his industry, his efficiency, his honor, or his morals. The blacks haven't been working with and for the white folks all these decades and centuries for nothing. While the average Nordic knows nothing of how Negroes actually live and what they actually think, the Negroes know the Nordics intimately. Practically every member of the Negro aristocracy of physicians, dentists, lawyers, undertakers and insurance men has worked at one time or another for white folks as a domestic, and observed with cynical detachment their orgies, obsessions and imbecilities, while contact with the white proletariat has acquainted him thoroughly with their gross stupidity and often very evident inferiority.

Toward the white working classes, indeed, there is a great suspicion and ill-feeling among the Negroes of the United States, much to the discomfiture of labor organizers and radicals. (The superior posture of the poor whites is based on nothing but the fortuitous circumstance that created them lighter in color.) The Negro puts this down to mere ignorance and a fear of competition for jobs. He believes that the white workers would have nothing to lose by ditching their color prejudice and aligning themselves with him. Ever since the so-called Civil War, he has been attempting to make the white proletariat see the light, but the mudsill Caucasians are obdurate. They think far more of an empty color superiority than they do of labor solidarity. Even the Jewish working-people, of whom solidarity might be expected, are far from being free of color prejudice.

Quite naturally, the Negroes feel far more kindly toward the whites of wealth and influence. From them they have obtained quite a few favors and largesses, but they do not lose sight of the fact that in the face of a group crisis, such as a lynching or a race riot, they cannot depend upon these upper class Nordics, who invariably desert when the mob heaves into sight, if indeed they do not join it. Directing and controlling the social and economic life of the country, they have allowed to go almost unquestioned all sorts of legislation inimical to the Negro's advancement. Toward individual Negroes they may be kindly and helpful, but except in the case of those who support Negro colleges and schools, they do not seem to care a rap about how the mass of blacks gets along. They allow gross inequalities in the appropriation of school funds; they allow Negro residential sections to go without adequate health inspection; they allow the compulsory school laws to remain unenforced in so far as the blacks are concerned; they make little or no protest against peonage and the horrors of Southern prisons and chain-gangs; they allow petty officials to make a mockery of the judicial system where Negroes are involved; and they refuse to see to it that the Negro is given the means to protect himself, if possible, through the franchise.

These upper class white folks contend that the workings of democracy prevent them from forcing the poor whites to toe the mark, but the Negroes observe that when it is desired to put over anything else that is deemed important, some way is always found. It seems to the thinking black man that, even granting that the white ruling class is incapable of assisting the masses of his people, they could at least openly enlist themselves on the side of honesty, fairness and square dealing, and thereby set an example to the others. But in the main they prefer to remain silent, and so leave the Negro to the mercies of the white rabble. Is it any wonder that he views them with distrust?

The attitude of the Northern white folks, in particular, puzzles and incenses him. Very often he feels that they are more dangerous to him than the Southerners. Here are folks who yawp continuously about liberty, justice, equality and democracy, and whoop with indignation every time a Senegambian is incinerated below the Potomac or the Belgians burn another village in the Congo, but toward the Negro in their midst they are quite as cruel as the the Southern crackers. They are wont to shout, in their liberal moments, that the Negro is as good as they are—as if that were a compliment!—and to swear by all the gods that they want to give him a square deal and a chance in the world, but when he approaches them for a job they offer him a mop and pail or a bellhop's uniform, no matter what his education and training may be. And except in isolated instances they see that he remains permanently in the lowly position they have given him.

The majority of them are almost as prejudiced as their Southern brethren, as any Negro knows who has ever attempted to enter a public place or to attend their social gatherings. Unlike the crackers, they only grudgingly give him a chance to earn a living, even as a menial. The restriction of European immigration has helped the Negro in the North considerably in the field of industry, but in the marts of commerce there seems to be an impression that he is incapable of functioning in the field of general business. At present, in the city of New York, which is considered a heaven for Negroes, and the tolerance and liberality of which are widely advertised throughout the nation, it is harder for a capable young Negro to get a decent job in a business house than it is for a comely Negro girl to escape being approached by white men in a Southern town.

To the intelligent Aframerican, an individual who has color prejudice seems manifestly to belong in the same intellectual class as the Holy Rollers and the Ku Kluxers. To judge an individual solely on the basis of his skin color and hair texture is so obviously nonsensical that he cannot help classing the bulk of Nordics with the inmates of an insane asylum. He views with mingled amusement and resentment the stupid reactions of white folks to a black skin. It excites his bitter mirth to observe how his entrance into almost any public place is sufficient to spoil the evening of the majority of the proud Caucasians present, no matter how intelligent they may claim to be. Nor is this insanity restricted alone to Anglo-Saxons, for Jews, Irish, Greeks, Poles, Russians, Italians, and Germans, even those who know little of the American language and less of the national customs, grow quite as apoplectic at the sight of a sable countenance.

III

Because the whites bellow so much about their efficiency and thrift, the Negro marvels that they go to the expense of a dual school system, Jim-crow railroad coaches and waiting-rooms, separate cemeteries, and segregated parks, libraries and street cars, with the obvious economic waste entailed, when the two peoples are so intimately associated all day, not to mention at night. Indeed, an examination of family trees will reveal that a large number of the whites and blacks are really related, especially in the land of cotton, where most of the hue and cry is raised about Anglo-Saxon purity. The South, the Negro does not fail to note, has actually retarded its own progress by maintaining this hypocritical double standard. And now it is threatening the standards of living in the New England mill towns and Northern coal fields by offering cheaper labor and lower taxes,—an offer that it can make only because of the ready acceptance of low living standards by the Southern white mob out of fear that Negroes will take its poorly paid jobs. Thus the results of the stupid system are felt in sections where hardly any Negroes live at all.

Almost every thoughtful Negro believes that the scrapping of the color caste system would not hinder but rather help the country. In their zeal to keep the black brother away from the pie counter, the whites are depriving the nation of thousands of individuals of extraordinary ability. The rigid training and discipline that the Negro has received since his arrival on these sacred shores has left him with a lower percentage of weaklings and incompetents than is shown by any other group. He has always had to be on the alert, ever the diplomat and skillful tactician, facing more trying situations in a week than the average white citizen faces in a year. This experience has certainly fitted him for a more important position than he now holds in the Republic. He is still imbued with the pioneering spirit that the bulk of the whites have had ironed out of them. He has energy and originality, the very qualities being sought today in business and government. Yet narrow bigotry and prejudice bar his way.

When the Southern white man asks the liberal Caucasian, "Do you want your daughter to marry a nigger?", he is probably hitting the nail on the head, for that is the crux of the entire color problem. Fear of economic and political competition is a factor, but above it is the bogey of sex competition. Equality in one field will unquestionably lead to equality in the other. And yet there is no law compelling blacks and whites to intermarry, and if the natural aversion that the scientists shout of really exists there need be no fears on that score. The Anglo-Saxons will retain their polyglot purity if they wish to do so—and if they actually find the Ethiops as repellant as the authorities on the subject allege.

But there is considerable doubt in the mind of the Negro as to whether this aversion actually exists, and whether the Anglo-Saxons actually think it exists. He tries to reconcile the theory that it does with the fact that nearly thirty States have laws prohibiting intermarriage between the so-called races, and with the additional fact that half of the Negroes in America obviously possess more or less Caucasian blood, thus being neither black nor white. The dark brother is convulsed with mirth over the famous one-drop theory, that distinctive American contribution to the science of anthropology which lists as Negroes all people having the remotest Negro ancestry, despite the fact that they may be, and often are, indistinguishable from the purest Nordic. He whoops with glee over the recent incident in Virginia, where the workings of the new Racial Integrity Law caused fifty white children to be barred from the white schools and ordered to attend Negro schools on the ground that they were Negroes, although no one knew it except the official genealogists, whereas all the while, in the States of Texas and Oklahoma, dark brown Mexicans and Indians were listed as white, and their children attended white schools. Knowing how much racial intermixture has been going on in this country since the Seventeenth Century, he is eager to see racial integrity laws passed in all of the States, as has been done in Georgia and Virginia, so that the genealogists may get busy on a national scale and thus increase the "Negro" population to at least four times its present number.

The Negro listens with a patient tolerance born of much knowledge and observation to the gabble of white gentlemen concerning the inferior morality of black women. These chivalrous folk, in some sections, do not hesitate to discuss these illicit amours within hearing of their Negro servitors, who boil within as they listen to the racy conversation of the advocates of racial separatism. The whites, of course, never hear the Negro's side of the story. Indeed, it is doubtful whether they realize that he has a side. For many and obvious reasons, he keeps his very interesting information to himself and grins along his way. He knows that no one group in this country monopolizes sex morality. Some day a black American Balzac is going to gather material for another volume of Droll Stories that will be quite as interesting and entertaining as the original.

The attitude of the whites toward the Negro's participation in politics seems very absurd to the contemplative dinge. He is a part of American life and he knows very well what is going on in politics. If his sooty brethren are not yet ready to be trusted with the ballot, neither for that matter are the ruck of peckerwoods. He has heard the yells and moans of the ex-Confederates about the alleged horrors of the Reconstruction period, when Negro legislators (who never controlled a single Southern State) are said to have indulged in graft on a great scale and squandered the public funds, but after careful investigation he has failed to learn of a single State or community in the whole country in which precisely the same thing is not true of white politicians. If Negroes sell their votes for a quart of corn liquor and two dollars, they are, he observes, by no means alone. Surely, he concludes, no Legislature composed of Negroes could pass more imbecile legislation than is the annual product of every legislative body in the land, not by any means excluding Congress. He concludes that he is barred from the ballot in the South only in order to keep capable Negroes from competing with broken-down Nordic lawyers for political sinecures. The excuse that his inability to use the ballot intelligently is the cause of his disfranchisement is highly amusing to him after a glance at the national scene.

The amazing ignorance of whites—even Southern whites—about Negroes is a constant source of amusement to all Aframericans. White men who claim to be intelligent and reasonable beings persist in registering surprise whenever they hear of or meet a Negro who has written a novel, a history, or a poem, or who can work a problem in calculus. Because of this naïveté, many mediocre Negroes are praised to the high heavens as geniuses of the first flight, and grow sleek and fat. Such fellows are frequently seized upon by glibble whites and labeled as leaders of the Negro race, without the Negroes being consulted on the matter. It seems incredible to most white folks that within the Negro group are social circles quite as cultured and refined as those existing among whites. I recall with amusement the story circulating the rounds of Aframerica concerning a wealthy white woman in a Southern city who asked her Negro maid if it was true that there were Negro homes in New York City such as those described by Carl Van Vechten in "Nigger Heaven," and who was quite astonished and incredulous when the girl informed her that not only were there such homes in New York but also in that town as well.

IV

Those Negroes who have entrée to white intellectual circles do not return to their own society with regret, but rather with relief, for they rightly observe that the bulk of the white intellectuals have more form than content; that they have a great deal of information but are not so long on common sense; and that they lack that sense of humor and gentle cynicism which one expects to find in the really civilized person, and which are the chief characteristics of even the most lowly and miserable Aframerican.

These so-called sophisticated whites leap from one fad to another, from mah jong to "Ask Me Another," with great facility, and are usually ready to embrace any cause that comes along thirsting for supporters. They are obsessed by sex and discuss it interminably, with long dissertations on their moods and reactions, complexes and sublimations. Life to them seems to be one perpetual psychoanalytical clinic. This appears to the Negro observer as a sure sign of sexual debility. The lusty, virile fellow, such as is the average shine, is too busy really living to moon overly much about the processes of life. It is difficult to imagine a group of intelligent Negroes sprawling around a drawing-room, consuming cigarettes and synthetic gin while discussing their complexes and inhibitions.

The Negroes have observed, too, that they know how to have a good time, despite all their troubles and difficulties, while the majority of white people certainly do not. Indeed, the frantic efforts of the crackers to amuse themselves is a never-ending source of amusement to the blacks. The Nordics take all amusements so seriously! They cannot swim without attempting to cross the English Channel or the Gulf of Mexico; they cannot dance without organizing a marathon to see which couple can dance the longest. They must have their Charleston contests, golf contests, coffee-drinking contests, frankfurter-eating contests. In short, they always go to extremes. The Negroes, on the other hand, have learned how to enjoy themselves without too much self-consciousness and exhibitionism.

The efforts of the Nordics to be carefree are grotesque; the so-called emancipated whites being the worst of the lot. No group of Negroes anywhere could be louder or rowdier than they are in their efforts to impress the neighborhood with the fact that they are having a good time. Look, for example, at their antics in Greenwich Village. It is not without reason that those white folks who want to enjoy themselves while in New York hustle for Harlem. The less emancipated ones go to the cabarets, where they can sit and watch Negroes dance and caper; the more sensible go to a Negro dance-hall, where they can participate in the fun. It is not uncommon to hear them say that the only time they thoroughly enjoy themselves is when they journey to the so-called Black Belt, where joy is not shackled or saddled.

This is probably the reason why, to the white brethren, the blacks are supposed to be happy-go-lucky children, with never a serious thought in their polls. But the Negro, recalling how the white folks swarm to hear such mountebanks as Billy Sunday, Krishnamurti, Conan Doyle, Imperial Wizard Evans and William Hale Thompson, and eagerly swallow all of the hokum flowing through the Republic, concludes that the Sambos have no monopoly on intellectual infantilism.

The Negro is a sort of black Gulliver chained by white Lilliputians, a prisoner in a jail of color prejudice, a babe in a forest of bigotry, but withal a fellow philosophical and cynical enough to laugh at himself and his predicament. He has developed more than any other group, even more than the Jews, the capacity to see things as they are rather than as he would have them. He is a close student of the contradictory pretensions and practices of the ofay gentry, and it is this that makes him really intelligent in a republic of morons. It is only during the last few years that the cracker intelligentsia have begun to sniff suspiciously at the old Anglo-Saxon slogans and concepts of justice, democracy, chivalry, honor, fair play, and so forth. The Negro has always been skeptical about them, knowing that they were conditioned by skin color, social position and economic wealth.

He is sick and tired of the holier-than-thou attitude of the white folks. On what, he inquires, do they base the contention that they are superior? He puts the history of the blacks down through the ages alongside that of the whites and is not ashamed of the comparison. He knows that there is as much evidence that black men founded human civilization as there is that white men did, and he doubts whether the occidental society of today is superior to the monarcho-communist society developed in Africa. He knows that neither intellectually nor physically is he inferior to the Caucasians. The fact is that in America conditions have made the average Negro more alert, more resourceful, more intelligent, and hence more interesting than the average Nordic. Certainly if the best measure of intelligence is ability to survive in a changing or hostile environment, and if one considers that the Negro is not only surviving but improving all the time in health, wealth, and culture, one must agree that he possesses a high degree of intelligence. In their efforts to fight off the ravages of color prejudice, the blacks have welded themselves into a homogeneity and developed a morale whose potentialities are not yet fully appreciated.

V

They laugh to themselves when they hear white folks refer to them as ugly and black. Thanks to the whites who are always talking about racial purity, the Negroes possess within their group the most handsome people in the United States, with the greatest variety of color, hair and features. Here is the real melting-pot, and a glorious sight it is to see. Ugly people there are, certainly, but the percentage of beautiful folk is unquestionably larger than among the ofay brethren. One has but to venture abroad in a crowd of whites and then go immediately to a fashionable Negro thoroughfare to be impressed with this fact. Black? Well, yes, but how beautiful! How well it blends with almost every color! How smooth the skin; how soft and rounded the features! But there are browns, chocolates, yellows and pinks as well. Here in Aframerica one finds such an array of beauty that it even attracts Anglo-Saxons, despite their alleged color aversion.

The dark brother looks upon himself as an American, an integral part of this civilization. To him it is not a white civilization, but a white and black civilization. He rightly feels that it is partially his, because for three hundred years he toiled to make it possible. He wants no more than an equal break with everybody else, but he feels that he has much greater contributions to make to our national life than he has so far been allowed to make. There is hope among the more enlightened Negroes that the similar group among the Nordics can be educated to see the social value and necessity of removing the barriers that now hamper the black citizen. The country can lose nothing and may gain much by a step. Strange as it may seem, many Negroes look to the enlightened Southern whites as the force that will help bring about the change. While these ofays do not understand the blacks as well as they think, they do at least know them fairly well, and there is, propaganda to the contrary, some good feeling between the two groups. This emerging group of Southern whites is gradually becoming strong enough to make its voice heard and respected, and in the years to come it will have more and more influence.

The Aframerican, being more tolerant than the Caucasian, is ready to admit that all white people are not the same, and it is not unusual to read or hear a warning from a Negro orator or editor against condemning all crackers as prejudiced asses, although agreeing that such a description fits the majority of them. The Ethiop is given to pointing out individual pinks who are exceptionally honorable, tolerant and unprejudiced. In this respect, I venture to say, he rises several notches higher than the generality of ofays, to whom, even in this day and time, all coons look alike.

PHILOSOPHERS AS KINGS

BY LOUIS LEFEVRE

DEMOCRACIES are inevitably ruled by second-rate men. While democracy is under fire on many counts, this is the most persistent charge in the indictment. The democratic politician, so the argument runs, must lack both intelligence and dignity to make a successful appeal to the masses. Obviously, the ideal state should be ruled by its wisest and best citizens. Therefore, democracy is, and always must be, a failure.

This argument, I believe, arises from a fundamental misconception of the nature of government. The regulation of the lives of others is far from the highest of human activities. To devote the best men to the task is not only wasteful but dangerous. The anarchist doctrine, to be sure, is fatally Utopian; as long as our behavior shows its present patterns, the policeman will clearly remain a necessity. But nobody argues that we must select our ablest leaders for the police force. Nor do I see why the directors of the police should represent the loftiest summit of intelligence and ability. If we believed that the government should regulate in detail everything that we do or say or think, it might be desirable to have the most capable men rule. But as long as we accept Thomas Jefferson's principle that the best government is that which governs least, the devotion of the greatest possible ability to the purpose is a plain waste of energy that might be more fruitfully applied elsewhere.

Indeed, the ideal which Plato expresses in his "Republic" might well be the most disastrous of all governments: "Until, then, philosophers are kings, or the kings and princes of this world have the spirit and power of philosophy, and political greatness and wisdom meet in one, and those commoner natures who follow either to the exclusion of the other are compelled to stand aside, cities will never cease from ill—no, nor the human race." Countless other sages have written in the same strain. Carlyle speaks of the "dire necessity of Nature's to bring in her Aristocracies, her Best, even by forcible methods"; and Nietzsche hails the coming supermen, who shall be "the law-givers of the future and the lords of the earth."

These ideals, of course, have never been fully realized. The only authentic philosopher who ever became a king was Marcus Aurelius, the last of the succession of the "five good emperors" of Rome, who were the nearest approach to Plato's philosopher guardians of the state that have ever held actual power. Is it not significant that the reign of Marcus Aurelius was one of the most turbulent in Roman history, and was followed by a complete collapse?

It is true that his government can hardly be blamed for some of the calamities which befell the empire. There were several attacks by foreign enemies and a devastating pestilence. But there were also internal revolts and famines, which were probably caused, or at least aggravated, by an overwhelmingly top-heavy bureaucracy. It seems very unlikely, indeed, that the foreign wars which gave Marcus so much trouble would have proved serious had the empire been in good condition.

During the whole period of the good emperors there had been a constant process of centralization. In the early days of the empire, a great deal of power was left to local governments, especially in the cities. But the city governments were often inefficient and corrupt, and the emperors were always receiving appeals to straighten out difficulties. As the good emperors were conscientious and able men, they devoted much attention to these problems. They appointed numerous inspectors to check up on the local authorities, and as they found continual evidence of serious deficiencies, the functions of government were gradually swallowed up by the more efficient but expensive imperial bureaucracy—which became less efficient and more expensive as its duties increased.

Under the rule of Aurelius, the most conscientious of the line, this process reached a point where the emperor worked from early morning till long after midnight. His duties included "the registry of the citizens, the suppression of litigation, the elevation of public morals, the care of minors, the retrenchment of public expenses, the limitation of gladiatorial games and shows, the care of roads, the restoration of senatorial privileges, the appointment of none but worthy magistrates, even the regulation of street traffic." It is little wonder that the empire groaned and staggered under the burden, and that the death of Marcus was followed by a century of chaos.

Another series of remarkably able rulers appeared in the Mogul emperors of India. In this case, also, the life of the last great emperor, Aurangzib, was filled with sedition and all manner of calamity, while after his death came the utter disintegration of his empire. Nevertheless, he was a man of extraordinary ability, energy, and devotion to the improvement of his people.

His father, Shah-Jahan, had neglected the duties of government for pleasure, built the Taj Mahal, and had a prosperous and tranquil reign, till he fell gravely and scandalously ill, and was deposed by his sons. In a letter to the fallen monarch, Aurangzib observed: "He is the truly great king who makes it the chief business of his life to govern his subjects with equity."

In accordance with this principle, says Stanley Lane-Poole, "Not an officer, not a government clerk, was appointed without his knowledge, and the conduct of the whole official staff was vigilantly scrutinized with the aid of an army of spies."

The religious zeal of Aurangzib led him to seek to abolish the privileges of the Rajputs, who constituted the best part of the imperial army, and to interfere with Hindu religious ceremonies. He laid special taxes on his non-Moslem subjects. In spite of the disaffection caused by these policies, he extended the boundaries of the empire well beyond their previous limits. But the last thirty years of his life were spent in the vain effort to suppress the wild Maratha tribes of bandit freebooters. When he died, the Maratha power was stronger than ever, and his empire was on the verge of its final downfall. His career is thus summed up by Lane-Poole:

Aurangzib's life had been a vast failure, indeed, but he had failed grandly. He had pitted his conscience against the world, and the world had triumphed over it. He had marked out a path of duty and had steadfastly pursued it, in spite of its utter impracticability. . . . The great Puritan of India was of such stuff as wins the martyr's crown. His glory is for himself alone. The triumph of character ennobled only himself. To his great empire his devoted zeal was an unmitigated curse.

II

The theory that the state should be ruled by its ablest men is, however, so firmly entrenched that such cases attract little attention. Though the disasters which followed Marcus and Aurangzib were clearly foreshadowed during their own lives, these misfortunes are usually attributed to the weakness of their successors. But if we consider government primarily in its function as the police power, the rule of the best appears in a new light. A rather lazy, mediocre policeman may be content to prevent people from cutting each other's throats. But obviously, this is altogether too simple a business to satisfy our supermen-philosophers. The ablest men desire most of all to magnify the importance and scope of their activities. They will see dozens of ways in which the conduct and habits of their subjects may be improved. To believe that they will not use their power to make these improvements is to expect that one of the strongest human instincts will cease to operate. It is no accident that in Plato's ideal republic every phase of life was strictly censored. Food and drink, occupation and marriage, love and art, music and poetry were all to be doled out to the citizens in rigidly prescribed doses.

It may be argued that we could afford to surrender our liberty if we were really governed by wise and capable rulers. But the best men have seldom been free from the most fatal prejudices of the crowd. Let anyone who doubts this consider the history of the Salem witchcraft trials. As Nathaniel Hawthorne observed, speaking of a victim of Massachusetts justice two hundred years ago:

He was one of the martyrs to that terrible delusion, which should teach us, among its other morals, that the influential classes and those who take upon themselves to be leaders of the people, are fully liable to all the passionate error that has ever characterized the maddest mob. Clergymen, judges, statesmen—the wisest, calmest, holiest persons of their day—stood in the inner circle round about the gallows, loudest to applaud the work of blood, latest to confess themselves miserably deceived.

And Massachusetts still remains faithful to her traditions.

The Holy Inquisition was operated for centuries in the name of religion by men who were often highly intelligent and had the loftiest of good intentions. I see no reason to think that an all-powerful Eugenic Tribunal, operating in the name of science, would show greater wisdom or self-restraint. It might begin with the sterilization of friendless unfortunates, but it would doubtless end with the elimination of anybody who disagreed with the learned members as to the merits of Shaw's plays or the proper design of girls' bathing suits. For anyone who differs from an omniscient tribunal is by definition wrong and a menace to society. And no tribunal long escapes the irresistible conclusion that it is omniscient.

Furthermore, if the ablest men run the government and impose their ideal way of life on the whole population, any important changes will meet the strongest possible opposition. The rulers, like all governing classes, will identify their own prestige and self-esteem with the regulations they have made. Any attempt to modify the ordained laws of diet or of marriage, for example, will be treated as an assault on the very foundations of the state. Not only liberty but progress will be impossible except through a revolution.

Instead of making our philosophers into kings, therefore, let them continue to philosophize. Let the most capable men do work of genuine importance—scientific research, education, medicine, music, engineering, what you will. And let the policemen and their bosses be recruited as they now are, in order that they may remain relatively harmless.

The objection that education is also a governmental function confuses teaching with educational administration. The only proper concern of the government is to find good teachers, give them adequate equipment, and let them alone. The attempt to prescribe in detail what shall be taught leads to such farces as the Dayton evolution trial and to the suppression of all effective teaching under mountains of red tape. Most of our school administration needs to be abolished, not to be done by men of greater ability.

III

It is true that democracy is not the only method of securing mediocrity in the rulers of a state, nor is its operation in this respect infallible. Pericles and Thomas Jefferson were very successful democratic politicians, and yet they surely did not lack either intelligence or dignity. In our own day, the late Senator Robert M. La Follette was not conspicuous for the spineless timidity that is sometimes declared to be essential for success under democracy, yet he controlled the politics of Wisconsin for many years. On the whole, however, the democratic politician is certainly not the type of man likely to dominate the life of the country he infests by any force of native ability.

Nevertheless, a government need not be composed of men of exceptional brilliance to dominate a nation, if the rulers have a continuous and stable tenure of power. Generally speaking, the government of a privileged class can count on remaining in office long enough to carry through its plans. Democracies, on the contrary, are notorious for their frequent changes of administration and the discontinuity of their policies. As all governmental policies tend to magnify the power of the rulers, this is an important advantage to the citizens of a democratic community.

Unhappily, we have drifted a considerable distance from the true democratic doctrine of Andrew Jackson. His war-cry, "To the victors belong the spoils," insured a clean sweep of all government officials at least once every eight years. The advance of civil-service reform has created a bureaucracy whose tenure of office is unaffected by changes of administration, and whose power is consequently fast increasing. Doubtless this reform was desirable in the case of such office-holders as research chemists, who have no authority, but its extension to men in positions of power over their fellows was and is a much more dubious matter.

It must be admitted that neither mediocre leadership nor frequent shifts are advantages in time of war. For this reason democratic government is easier to maintain in America, or in England behind her Channel barrier, than in an unprotected nation surrounded by enemies. When a democracy engages in a serious war, it is almost inevitably compelled to establish a dictatorship. The dictator may be a fool or a tyrant, but this seems to be an unavoidable war risk. If the people have any strong desire to recover their liberty, they will probably be able to deal with their leader as all the victorious nations did after the late war was over, and send another victim of "the fickle mob" to join Lloyd George and Wilson. If not, they are predestined to tyranny in any event.

IV

Another characteristic of democracy is the enormous obstacles it sets up to enforcing any law strongly opposed by a reasonably large minority. If the rulers are aristocrats, with a reputation for wisdom and consistency to maintain, they will be obliged to enforce their laws to the bitter end. If, on the other hand, they are officials subject to frequent removal by popular vote, it will not take them long to forget the existence of unpopular legislation.

The Volstead Act is an obvious illustration. Long ago Mohammed discovered the idea of Prohibition, and under autocratic governments the extent of enforcement in the nations of Islam has been relatively high. The contrast with the domain of American democracy is striking. Whatever measure of success Prohibition enforcement has gained in this country is largely due to the efforts of appointed Federal judges with a life tenure of office, and employers anxious to keep alcohol from their workmen—activities obviously irrelevant to a discussion of democratic government.

The Prohibition law is no isolated example. The American Constitution still contains a clause that theoretically requires the return of fugitive slaves to their owners. In 1850, Congress passed a law for the more effective execution of this provision, the efforts to enforce which became a burning issue in the decade before the Civil War. The advocates of Law Enforcement spoke out with passionate eloquence. A Brooklyn Presbyterian minister, Dr. Ichabod Spencer, in reply to an editorial on "How to Oppose the Fugitive Slave Law," delivered an especially fiery sermon:

I never read more wicked and abominable principles! They deserve not only the reprehension of every Christian, but the entire indignation of all civilized mankind! . . . Be obedient to the laws of your land! Do not resist these ordinances of God! Stand by the Constitution of your country! If that die, the most of your happiness and your hopes die with it!—yea, it would be a calamity to the civilized world! Christianity herself would be hindered a whole century in her march! Respect your rulers. Frown indignantly upon the low and vile abuse now heaped so liberally upon the great men of your country! Be peaceful citizens! Be a law-abiding people, with all your sentiments opposed to violence, bloodshed, and confusion; and aim to allay all the excited and angry feelings that may come up around you.

In spite of this appeal and many other equally cogent arguments, the opponents of slavery refused to return fugitives to chains and possible death by flogging. Instead, they openly resisted all efforts to enforce the law. A regular system, the famous Underground Railroad, was established, by which it is estimated that at least two thousand slaves annually escaped to Canada. At first the national government made spasmodic attempts to seize and return the runaways, but after several riots, including one in Boston which called out a considerable force of regular army troops and cost $100,000, the law in many sections became practically a dead letter. One of the principal grievances alleged by the seceding States in 1860 was the non-enforcement of this law, in spite of its express sanction in the Constitution.

After the downfall of the South, the Northern States hastily enacted constitutional amendments providing that the freed slaves should at once possess full rights of suffrage, while many of their former masters were barred from political office. The effort to enforce these amendments embittered the decade following the war, and lasted precisely as long as Northern armies occupied the South as a conquered province. The effective enforcement of the Fifteenth Amendment in States unwilling to accept it ceased when the troops withdrew, while the Fourteenth was adroitly turned from the protection of Southern Negroes into the chief shield of the privileges of great corporations.

There is no evidence that in any of these cases the majority of the people throughout the nation were opposed to the law in question. It is, therefore, perfectly clear that neither ordinary laws nor the express provisions of the Constitution itself can be enforced in America against the will of a determined minority. It is sometimes said that this fact is due to the innate lawlessness of the American people. But precisely similar instances are found in the history of other democracies. The British are held up as the model of a law-abiding nation. But trade-unions were forbidden by British law until 1824, while strikes or any other combined effort to raise wages, reduce hours, or accomplish any of the usual ends of labor unions were illegal till 1875. Nevertheless, these laws did not in the least prevent the unions from existing, or from striking.

Since it may be accepted as axiomatic that all governments will enact foolish legislation, this difficulty in law enforcement under democracy is a real advantage. It is true that the breakdown may extend to such generally approved laws as that against murder. Lynching has become a fairly regular institution in some parts of America. This, however, is by no means an inevitable result of democracy. In highly civilized countries like England or France, mob violence is rare, but it was common in autocratic Russia under the Czars, and it is common in present-day Italy. Herrin, Illinois, is the product, not of any form of government, but of a barbaric stage of culture.

To sum up: A democracy is governed by men of ordinary ability, who lack the capacity to dominate the life of the nation, while the ablest men are free for more important activities. The rulers are frequently changed, and are therefore unable to consolidate and extend their power. Laws opposed by a vigorous minority it is almost impossible to enforce. For these reasons, and not because of any magic wisdom in the masses, democracy is the best form of government yet discovered.

NIGHT-THOUGHTS

BY VIRGINIA MOORE

IF I COULD walk behind you, years,
And drive you up a stony hill
Like pitiful sheep before my fears
Are known to you—before the shears
Have cut to kill.

And down again. And out of sight.
How good when you are cleanly gone!
For many and many a sleepless night
When only sheep are colored white,
And many a dawn,

I lay and listened, bleat on bleat,
And counted numbers, up and back;
I heard the little running feet
That come like memories and retreat;
I saw the track;

I felt the burry, matted wool
And shivered at the touch,
I tried to wind it on a spool,
Remembering a beautiful—
It was too much!

O years, O little crying sheep,
Go where the darkened otter delves,
Go nibble at the meadow-sweet
That cannot know a man's defeat—
Go lose yourselves.

And I shall sleep the long night through
And think that I am tardily brave,
Because I closed my eyes to you.
And bleating never, never blew
Beyond the grave.

LADIES OF THE MOB

BY ERNEST BOOTH

ONCE when I was very young I saw a newspaper picture of a lady. "Beautiful Accomplice," it was captioned. My interest was aroused. In various books I had met beautiful heroines, but that was my first knowledge that a woman who associated herself with a thief could be—and authentically was—beautiful! Clipping the picture, I sought for a secure place to hide and preserve it. Opening the large dusty family Bible, I inserted it between two pages containing the Canticles! But my sudden and intense interest in Biblical lore provoked an investigation. The picture was discovered, I was told I had committed fifty-seven varieties of desecration, and, after being paddled, was consigned to punishment in a clothes-closet.

I carried the memory of that picture with me through all the years I was stealing for a living. An accomplice, beautiful, fascinating, and loyal! For a decade it was the paramount desire of my life to find her. During my quest I met many ladies of the mob who actually seemed to possess some of her high qualities. Beauty—often! Fascination—until I knew them! Loyalty—Ah, yes! But there were others, alas, vastly different. They were the girls who made their livelihoods "off" thieves: never definitely entering into crime, but helping to spend a major portion of the money stolen. Their usual prey was the more egotistical sort of thief; with a skill rivaling Lorelei Lee's they devoured him. Others stole from thieves. Yet others practiced a polite form of blackmail: they would possess themselves of all possible information concerning the activities of a thief, and draw dividends from it in the form of clothes and jewelry. Theirs were not crude, open threats, but veiled insinuations. How often have I heard the complaint, "Sure, I'd like to ditch her—but what the hell can I do? She knows everything!"

One girl that I recall was typical of this class. Not beautiful, she yet possessed a fascination which brought her the plunder of several thieves. One after another they were drawn to her, abode their destined hours, and then vanished into prisons, to live for years in memory of the time when Florence was their divinity. The daughter of a small Pacific Coast town, she had been adopted in infancy by a Baptist preacher. Some indefinable, inherent quality had enabled her to weather his imprecations, and she emerged with a personality all the finer for the heat of the flames that had tested it. Although I knew her when she lived with one thief or another, at different times, she ever preserved her separate entity. She was only with them—not of them.

Our acquaintance began when she was about twenty years old; we intuitively sensed sympathetic traits in each other. There was a brief period of antagonistic probing, and then a truce was agreed upon, and we respected it for ten years. Thus, after ceasing to be "possibilities" to each other, we became fast friends.

During a lull in the trial of her latest devotee, we were in her apartment one evening. Although she had by then passed the Rubicon beyond which women no longer count birthdays, she still preserved the air and appearance of unconquerable youth. Reclining upon a sofa, her slender body relaxed in a careless and ingratiating attitude of repose, she was floating tiny wreaths of cigarette smoke to the ceiling. The impression she would have made upon fresh eyes was that of an ingenuous creature who must be protected against the devastating assaults of reality. Her short, attractively-bobbed hair showed faint glints of red-gold. She released each word slowly, hesitantly, as though it were too fragile, too precious to send unprotected into the air.

"I hope," she said, and her eyes avoided mine. "I hope Johnnie gets another disagreement from that jury. . . ." Her voice trailed off.

I glanced meaningfully at the vanity-case atop a nearby stand. The key to a safe-deposit compartment lay concealed within that case. A fair portion of the unset gems from Johnnie's last raid upon a jewelry store was cached in the vault.

"Yes," she continued, "I hope he is freed." Our eyes met. "Oh! but I've given over half of them to the attorneys. I can't do more—what would happen to me if he goes to prison?"

After Johnnie was convicted, Florence introduced me to another chap who was guarding her from the cruel world. She assured me that she had done rightly by her own interests when Johnnie went to jail.

II

Another—Marie—was the antithesis of Florence. Action was the word emblazoned upon her face. Marie possessed vast aggressiveness. Her presence in a group—at an apartment, a "scatter," or a roadhouse—set up a liveliness which even the varnish-removing beverages could not rival. She was ambitious to engineer a bank raid. She spent several weeks "casing," that is, becoming familiar with the habits and locations of the employes, the hours that money arrived, and so on. Then she attempted to enlist three experienced men to rob the bank with her. We enjoyed Marie, she was so refreshing, and we respected her ability to keep her mouth closed, should she be arrested, but we laughed at her efforts to blossom out as a leader of bandits. Exasperated, she sought out some foppish drugstore cow-boys, drove them to the bank, and filled them with the notion that they could rob it. She almost had to shout to get them through the doorway. Then the force of her dynamic personality died, and they bungled the affair disgustingly. Two of them were killed; the third, wounded, gained the machine. Marie pulled him across the side door, and held him there with one hand as she piloted the car through the traffic. She ministered to him, and borrowed money from us to pay the doctor. Later he recovered, and, visiting his old haunts, was arrested.

Marie reaped her reward for stepping out of her class by being brought to trial with him on the stand against her, as a State's witness. It came near breaking the rest of the outfit, "squaring her" out of that "rap." Now she is content to help her man count his money after he returns from "working."

III

Another, Madge, was young, pretty, and of Iowa stock. She caught Red's fancy when he and I arrived in Los Angeles after a forced trip from Denver. She was a waitress, and covered a dearth of brains with a recently-acquired line of snappy chatter and a white uniform pleasantly charm-revealing.

Red's regular lady, the volatile Vera, was spending a month at Hot Springs. In the rôle of a wealthy oil-land owner, he soon convinced Madge that as a profession, "dealing 'em off the arm" was not so much. Two weeks later, when I called at their bungalow, she naïvely informed me that they were married. I extended hearty congratulations.

Red was rough, abrupt, and reputed to be vicious. That reputation was merited when he was "working." Madge, believing implicitly his tale of oily wealth, never questioned the truth of his explanations for his absences. I think it was that blind, trustful belief in him which divested Red of his usual hard exterior.

"My God! I'm hooked for that little broad," he confided to me one day. "But what the hell am I going to do when Vera shows up? She's due any day next week."

"Can't you give Madge carfare back to Iowa?"

"Sure," and Red offered a curiously sheepish grin. "Sure I could, but I don't want to. I'm telling you she's the kind of broad every thief ought to have. She likes to cook, and she's crazy about that flop of ours—even had a guy come out and make pictures of it, garden, car, everything. Wanted to send 'em to her folks. Say! I'm going to root for some real big dough—marry her—and get off this racket!"

"Steady! steady!" I cautioned. "You've been drunk before—and got sober." I had visions of an efficient partner gone to seed.

Madge was crying next afternoon when she admitted me. She was crying as a child cries—from its heart.

"S-s-some policeman took Reddy away."

Snatching up a coat, I wrapped it about her, and quickly bundled her into the car. Red's arrest might be only a routine one, and it might be—any one of several unpleasantly definite things. There was no time for consolation when policemen were about.

She accompanied me without question as we drove to a beach town. She sobbed less frequently as the rush of air struck her face. Gone was all her snappy chatter: she was an eighteen-year-old baby knowing great grief for the first time.

Salvation Nell Murray's home was a four-roomed apartment on the second floor of a building she owned. She had befriended thieves and their girls for a score of years. Her place was an exchange for news and messages. A large, overripe woman, with a sparkle in her eye and a rough and ready humor, she had simplified the problems of life into eating, drinking and loving.

"This is Madge," I told her. "Her husband has had some difficulty. You know how these officers are." Nell nodded. "I don't want to see Madge arrested. Can she stay with you for a few days?"

Nell opened her arms to the girl and enfolded her to an ample breast. I watched the scene with pleasure, for in her movement was the gesture of one who welcomes with the soul. It was like the embrace of some great divinity. She could welcome and embrace Madge in particular, and yet seem to include scores of others at the same time.

Vera read of Red's arrest, and the news of his "wife." She rushed to Los Angeles, visited him at the jail, and then, unable to get a satisfactory explanation, she sought me. Of course I knew of no girl in connection with Red! Vera was unconvinced. Information she held, if revealed to the police, would have resulted in sending Red to prison for a longer time than he could hope to live. She never once intimated that she contemplated such a course—she knew of other girls' "suicides," and so I did not believe she entertained the idea.

But Red was held for investigation. The police, aware of his prison record, believed that he had been at work in the State, and continued to show him up to bank employés, messengers, and payroll carriers in the hope that one would recognize him. Before I could return to tell Madge that she had best remain quietly with Nell, she had returned to the bungalow, and there Vera met her.

The indignant Vera disillusioned her quickly concerning Red. The discussion brought on a fight, and Vera lost. She rushed to Nell's to get a gun. There I encountered her. Madge was packing when we returned. A newspaper, folded open at the want-ad column, lay atop her wardrobe trunk.

"I don't care," she said with some return of her former bantering attitude. "Redheads was always fickle."

IV

There comes now the memory of Dale's girl, Yvonne. She was French and she had come to this country as the wife of a patriot who had fought to make the world safe for democracy. Shortly afterward, he relinquished the charms of Yvonne for the more substantial ones of a Kansas corn-fed.

Though unable to speak American as it is gargled in a Kansas City dance-hall, Yvonne was yet able to get a job as a hostess. I danced with her one night, waiting to meet Dale. When he came in they danced. After that she danced no more with me, or anyone else—except Dale. From that moment there ceased to be a Dale or an Yvonne; they were inseparable and almost indivisible.

An attractive pair. Wrapped in their peculiar interests, they would be absent from the city for days, and offer no excuse to anyone when they returned. Dale was teaching her English, and acquiring some French for himself. Their jumbled conversations, particularly during dinner at some restaurant with the rest of us, were filled with a happy carelessness. Yvonne laughed often, but she had eyes for none but Dale. So evident was her devotion that when he suggested bringing her with us when we "went against" a large down-town bank there was but a momentary dissension. She could already handle a shotgun or a pistol with a skill bespeaking volumes for his training.

I was the last man out of the bank. The others were in the car. Yvonne, behind the wheel, snatched us away from the curb with a rush almost breath-taking. I caught a glimpse of her eyes in the rear-view-mirror, and they were dark and intent. There was nothing of fear or terror in them. Rather they held calm determination and cold resolve. The infrequent seconds during which she was not busy with the car were used to snatch melting glances at Dale by her side.

That night the house was surrounded by police and sheriffs. We had remained too long in one neighborhood. The officer on the beat had developed certain suspicions, and having unusual intelligence for a cop, had kept his ideas to himself instead of coming to the house to make inquiries. Finally, calling in help, he sent a street urchin to the door with a note telling us we were under arrest. Their message named several thieves whom the cops believed were with us in the house. Anticipating a battle, they had warned us with the note, and when we did not reply they opened fire. Yvonne displayed the same countenance she had worn during the afternoon's drive.

"This is it—of which you told me?" she whispered to Dale as he and I stood irresolute.

"Yes," he replied. "It's a case of sell out—we can't surrender."

"Sell out?" Yvonne wrinkled her brow. "How is that?"

"You wouldn't understand." Dale jerked out. Already the police had fired a few shots into the house.

"I do!" she exclaimed, quickly taking a place behind a trunk, and preparing to reload guns for us.

"I can send you out. They won't shoot a girl—I don't believe they will shoot a girl," he amended.

"Give her a white handkerchief to wave and let her go before they start pouring slugs into the house," I suggested.

"White kerchief—wave—out?" She looked quickly from Dale to me, her eyes wide and accusing. "Leave you?"

"Better—if you stay you'll get killed and—"

"No!" She stood erect, and swept past me as though I had ceased to exist. "Mon chérie! My little cabbage!" and a lot more. Dale gathered her to him. The pose might have been directed by a movie director, but it was really instinctive, unaffected. Faced with the fear of separation, they clung tenaciously to each other. I had the impression of two people trying to forestall the inevitable by the strength of their arms.

But it was not a moment for drawing fanciful conjectures. We needed an "out"—and needed it immediately. The firing was desultory—only the pistols and rifles had been used. The machine guns and tear-gas bombs were held in reserve. Leaving Dale and Yvonne for a moment, I scanned the shrubs alongside the house. Automobile lights and a couple of searchlights were being employed to illuminate the premises, but there was a dark strip where two lights failed to overlap. Returning to the kids, I brought them to the window and showed them the only possible chance of escape. In a few minutes it would be covered. But at the moment the siege had not been thoroughly organized.

Yvonne wore a light dress, and Dale forced her into a drab duster. He contented himself with turning up his coat-collar to conceal the white of his shirt. Swiftly he dropped to the grass. I lowered Yvonne. They crouched and scampered through the shrubbery. I saw them emerge at the farthest end. A man accosted them. In the bright light there I discerned them, without coats or hats: they had discarded them to attempt a desperate ruse. They clung to each other as though frightened. Yvonne was speaking to the man, who, incidentally, held a rifle in one hand. I crawled up on the grass close enough to hear the conversation. She pleaded that they be allowed to go home. They had been for a walk, she said, and they lived but a few blocks further. The officer accepted their explanation, because he could not reconcile the two apparently scared youngsters with the bad men he had been sent to apprehend. He ordered that the lights be thrown on the garden. In the confusion of the adjustment I gained the sidewalk and a moment later mingled with the crowd.

Yvonne and Dale left the city that night. The house was riddled, two officers were killed in the cross-fire, and when it was found empty about noon the next day, the police were baffled to explain the escape of six bandits! But from the laundry marks on napkins in the house, the police established past residence and soon had our pictures identified. Yvonne was linked to Dale by some of the loose-mouthed gentry of the dance-hall. Her picture was unearthed in some manner, and with its publication, Dale and Yvonne were unable to remain in the State. They headed toward the Pacific Coast. At Colorado Springs they were stopped for questioning. An officer attempted to arrest them. Yvonne shot him through the head.

Westward they drove until they reached Glendale, a suburb of Los Angeles—Tristram and Isolde seeking a haven of safety for their love. Faced with the ocean, they drove back a few miles and rented a furnished home. From there they seldom ventured. Dale had a great sum of money from the Kansas City robbery, and there was no reason for further stealing just then.

There were frequent rumors that they were in Southern California, but the police could get no definite report. Eager to rejoin some of the outfit, Dale risked a visit to Salvation Nell's. He had no other means of establishing communication, and he wanted someone to go with him on a reckless robbery that would result in making him independently rich, and enable him to return to France with Yvonne. This much he told Nell before a chance visit from a detective forced him to leave. In the exchange of shots Dale was struck in the arm. With his identity established, and his presence positively located in that part of the State, the police posted bills like circus plasters for his arrest. It was impossible for him to undertake a lengthy drive in his condition, but Yvonne insisted that she could hold the wheel for the five hundred miles necessary to bring them into San Francisco. First they alternated in making trips from the house to different gasoline stations. At each they would fill the car tank and a five-gallon can with gasoline. With thirty gallons in reserve they could make the dash without stopping. They were set to go one evening about dark, and in an expensive, closed car they drove to the outskirts of Glendale.

Stopping long enough to fill the tank again was a fatal mistake.

Dale had been at that station two days before. The clerk had recognized him and reported to the police. Four detectives were waiting, concealed in the shadows. Into the light Dale drove. While he was instructing the attendant an officer stepped into view, and, leveling a gun at him, he called for surrender. Dale leaped from the car and shot the man. Another opened fire from one side. Yvonne shot at him as he pumped the contents of an automatic into Dale. In the light, Dale whirled about, fired at the officer, and then collapsed. Yvonne lifted a rifle and fired at the third officer again. The fourth raised a shotgun and blasted away half her head.

V

Mae had married Art within a week after he had got seventeen thousand dollars for his end of a robbery. She was past forty, and had served several terms in the county jails, yet she had preserved some of the charm that gave Ninon de Lenclos the power to attract homage until the day of her death. Mae had a passion for marrying young thieves. Art was aware that she had not been divorced from the others, who were all in prison; one of them he knew. But when she insisted that he observe the legal rituals before being granted her debatable favors, he acquiesced.

Mae had a code, and followed it. She handled Art as a veteran trainer handles a fighter. She instructed him in what parts of town to avoid. She labeled for him the questionable characters among the thieves in her extensive acquaintance. And when he was arrested she used her peculiar knowledge to get him a disagreement in the first two juries. At the third trial she bribed the bailiff and secured an acquittal. Together they knew a few hysterically happy weeks. Art swore that she was the finest and most loyal of all women. What was a difference of twenty years in age?

When he was again arrested following a robbery in a different part of the State, Mae arranged a quick straw-bond for him. The investigation that followed his failure to appear for trial caused the State to become too small to contain him. So he went into an adjoining State and "worked" with a group on a night raid. He was arrested on a chance recognition, and Mae arranged a fight against extradition for him. When that seemed likely to fail, she climbed to the top of the jail, sawed several bars from a skylight and lowered hacksaws into the corridor. After Art had sawed his way out of his cell, she lowered a rope and he climbed safely up beside her.

When they had escaped to another part of the country, Mae drove a car while Art held up and secured from two employes a large payroll. When he was subsequently arrested for that robbery, and Mae was held as a suspect-accomplice, Art confessed and exonerated her.

"No, I never visit Art," she told me. "It would be cruel. I can't help him now. But you can't hold that against me—I stuck to him as long—and did as much for him—as anyone could."

She had a code—and she followed it.

VI

But to return to Vera—Red's girl—Vera the curious mixture.

We were casing a large bank, and needed a house to work from. Red was well known to the police of that city, so the preliminary work devolved upon me. Certain experiences of the past had instilled in me a distrust of women as partners. If I could get a girl like Vera—fine! But I preferred at that time to have only the passing contacts with women that I had known before serving my first prison term. Vera was against this.

"What you need," she said, "is a square girl. I think I know one for you. You don't have to get married. Not right at first—but you will after a while. It's the only right way to live. I've been a thousand times happier since Red and I were married."

We were seated about the dinner table, and she leaned over to touch Red's freckled hand. He grinned. I mused on the incongruity of her logic. Happier since they had yielded to a legal requirement? Happier in his profession of robber because he had stood before a justice of the peace and mumbled a formula? . . .

Vera was against Red's continued stealing. She wanted him to make enough money in one raid to buy an apartment-house and then live within the law. She had found the germ of that idea, perhaps, in her belated observance of the marriage vows. Red was not exactly against the idea, but he had a great many friends who were constantly needing help. Frequently he had to pay attorney's fees for thieves who had been caught broke. Once he had posted fifteen thousand dollars for an appeal bond. When the case was decided adversely by the Appellate Court he urged the chap to run away, and forfeited the bond with a smile. But Vera became insistent that his constant risks were too great. He treated her pleas lightly, and it was that fact which first gave her the idea that she was not completely understood by her husband.

Thus Vera grew in the belief that Red did not appreciate her. She nagged him constantly. She wanted him to quit, and leave the city with her. Her intuition told her there was something wrong. . . . I was in the house often in the days that followed. Vera threatened to kill herself if Red did not leave with her. He offered to send her halfway across the continent to visit some friends while he and I completed our business. But she insisted that she would remain rather than go away and be prey to her imagination. She wanted to know precisely what chances he was taking. She had to have something to worry about—and Red supplied it.

She and I were waiting for Red. It was about eight o'clock and he had not yet come home for dinner. She became as nearly hysterical as a woman can go without screaming. She pulled at a pillow on the lounge until she tore it to shreds. Then, in odd contrast to her appearance, she spoke quietly. "He just has to come before another hour or I'll go crazy—I can't stand this!" There was nothing dramatic in her voice. She made the statement so calmly and judiciously that the words seemed to send a chill about the room. There was an ominous note of finality in them. She had mounted to the heights of anxiety and there concluded that she must have relief from the constant strain. Though she had stolen often herself, and taken her chances many times with Red, she yet retained some saving quality which would not allow her to enter completely into the life. Whether the marriage ceremony had released that quality, I can only guess; but I know that after it she more than ever desired to have her man with her—that she was made frantic by the fear of receiving a 'phone call from an attorney, to tell her that Red was in jail. I thought her rather selfish at that moment. As I saw it, Red was taking chances for her daily. He was risking long years in prison to gain for her the home she had so often pictured to him.

Again she grew restless. Her calm determination now deserted her. She plucked the shredded pillow case with increasing nervousness. As her eyes encountered mine I saw they were wide, and she blinked rapidly. Ever acutely conscious of others' moods, I tried to calm her, despite the fact that I was fighting a battle to retain my own composure. I succeeded only in adding fuel to the flame rising within her.

"It's not worth it!" she exclaimed. "All the money in the world isn't worth this worry."

"It'll be all right," I offered. "He'll be home soon. Probably he's only busy, and—"

"Oh! you don't understand!" She stood erect and crossed to the window. "It isn't only now—it's always! Can you imagine what it means to have the one you love better than life constantly away from your side?" I thought I could, and again I assured her that he would come soon.

"Yes," she said with an odd catch of her breath, "yes, I believe he will. But in the morning he'll be gone again—for the whole day, maybe half the night. And then this awful worry! When he's here, everything is all right—but when I'm alone—oh, I can't explain it! Please, please! Make him stop! won't you, please? Ask him to stop and let's all go away! You don't know how much it would mean to me, away from here. Please make him stop, won't you?"

She was rapidly losing every vestige of control.

"Of course I will," I assured her. "There's no reason why you and he can't take a train out tonight. I'll talk with him, Vera—but sit down and don't be worrying so. It'll be all right."

"If it only would be all right." She returned to the lounge, and grabbing the torn pillow she shook it as though to relieve her excitement in physical exertion. "I've heard that so often: 'It'll be all right.' It's a thieves' phrase that gets on my nerves. I can't stand it! I can't stand this—I've got to do something!" At the ringing of the telephone she uttered a sharp cry. "Oh, what has happened? I know that's him."

Racing into another room I answered the call. It was Red. He told me to take a certain suitcase containing a new Thompson automatic from the closet, and put it in a "plant" in the cellar. He believed that he was being followed and had decided not to chance a raid if he could not shake off "the tail."

Hastily I hid the suitcase.

Returning to the room, I told Vera that Red was all right. I found her lying with her face buried in a pillow, her toes beating a tattoo on the end of the lounge. Her body quivered as though in the toils of some tremendous convulsion. I touched her shoulder and she turned a face so distorted with weeping that I was startled.

"I can't s-s-stand this any longer," she sobbed. "You don't know! Oh, he doesn't love me or he wouldn't treat me this way!"

Again she pounded the pillow. I tried to reason with her. She repulsed me. "Oh, leave me alo-o-one—" and she was hysterical again.

She had extinguished the light in the room. A shaft from the adjacent hallway cut sharply into the darkness and illuminated her form. I stood so that the glare of it would not strike her eyes as she twisted and wiggled about. An anguish so deep, so profound, seemed to possess her that she ceased to be herself. She became the symbol of all thieves' girls—of all the women who have lived, loved, and worried with thieves. Always theirs has been the rôle of sustaining a silent grief transcending in its horrors the most ignominious horror ever suffered by the martyrs.

A Eurydice in Hell, awaiting the music of her Orpheus. Yes—a thousand Eurydices! And in a Hell such as Dante never imagined.

VII

Her frantic struggling mounted until it approached the point where it must break—either in great comedy or great tragedy. I was holding her in a futile attempt to induce a return of sanity. Then Red entered. He had opened the door so quietly that I was unaware of his presence until his form shut out a portion of the hall light.

"What the hell's the matter?" He approached and I caught the odor of whiskey.

"She's worried," I explained. "She wants you to quit the racket and—"

Vera sat erect. Red dropped down beside her. They faced the light. Her lips were distorted and her hair hung before her eyes. Encircling her with one arm, Red brushed back the locks from her forehead.

"What's it you want?" he asked, thickly.

"O-o-o-o!" She tried to free herself from him. Together they stood up. Red's eyes were hostile, uncomprehending.

Disengaging herself she faced him. "I can't stand this! I can't stand this! I can't stand this! You've got to quit now—or—" she strove desperately for some control of her mounting voice and failed—"or I'll kill myself!"

"Say!" Red spoke sharply. "Cut that out! What do you think this is? Think I'm going to duck because you have a fit?"

"Don't! don't!" She shrank from him as though he had struck her. "Don't talk like that, Red. You don't love me—oh! I'm better dead!"

"Aw, Vera—you know I can't quit now. C'm on—be a regular fellow. Have a drink and you'll feel better." Red was less angry then, but his irritation was evident. He bent over her and attempted to kiss her. She interposed her hand so suddenly it seemed like a slap on his face.

"Oh, I'm better dead! I can't go on!" She almost shouted it.

Stung by the unexpected slap, Red jerked himself from her. "Stop talking like that! Stop saying you're better dead. What in the name of God is the matter with you? Ain't I giving you all I can?"

"Ple-e-ase promise me you'll stop stealing."

"Sure—when there ain't anything more to steal," Red snorted.

"Oh-h-h, if I had a gun I'd kill myself!"

Angrily, Red snatched a revolver from his pocket, and held it before her.

"Here's a rod. Blow your brains out if you want to—or else shut up and have a drink."

With a movement so quick I could scarce believe it had occurred, she caught the revolver from his hand, put the muzzle into her mouth and pulled the trigger. Glass from a shattered picture on the wall behind her tinkled on to the floor as she collapsed on the lounge.

HEARTS AND FLOWERS—AND CASH

BY HENRY F. PRINGLE

THAT the latter-day American business man is fundamentally, and not merely for the sake of window-dressing, filled with sweetness and light is demonstrated by a study of his trade journals and the voluptuous literature of his sales campaigns. In the old days, before psychology was as necessary to every high-powered executive as a beautiful private secretary and a row of push-buttons on his desk, the standard advertisement was simple and concise. "Juicy Plug is the Best Chewing Tobacco," "Glob's Hair-Tonic Grows Hair": such austere statements, in good, heavy black type, were the last word in commercial seduction. But now an expensive magazine-cover artist is hired as the first step. If, for instance, the master-mind is selling cigarettes, he orders the creation of a canvas showing a girl seated in the moonlight with a young man. She is a very pretty girl, and she is posed so that her silk stockings gleam alluringly. The young man is incredibly handsome. A variation of this shows a bathing beach whereon the maiden exhibits her lovely curves and the young man is tanned like a life-guard. Still another picture shows a bridle path, with the girl smartly patrician in a riding habit. Whatever the scene, the two make a Fine Young Couple. Quite incidentally, or so it seems, the young man is smoking a cigarette, and so the work of art gives the impression that less dazzling lads may also pal around with beautiful ladies—if only they will switch to this particular brand. It is all very romantic, and it results in enormous sales.

The realtors were the pioneers in this poetical school of advertising. Inherently romantics, it was easy for them to paint enticing pictures. The ill-fated Florida boom inspired their copy readers to dazzling efforts, and every stretch of hot sand along that depressing coast was depicted as a Park Avenue resident's idea of Heaven. Now that the investing public is momentarily nervous about Florida, some of these masters have turned their talents to the North. I quote from a recent blurb about a Long Island resort.

408

At night, stars gleam like lanterns swinging in the sky. And the refreshing tang of salt sea air rides in on the lap of a gentle breeze. Softly comes the lulling roar of restless surf. And when the hills have cast long shadows in the slanting, silver path of the moon, you can sleep as you've never slept before.

Each golden day leaves you drowsy and contented. For at your manor door your slightest whim is gratified. It's a glorious land of sport in which to live. A precious bit of Kentish coast perched on the slender tip of Long Island.

Some of the automobile men have also adopted this lascivious form of address, changing the style to suit their product. Once they dwelt exclusively on carbureters, springs, upholstery, balloon tires and miles-per-gallon and frowned upon fancy writing. But lately many of them have been saying it with elegant hand-painted oil paintings. One lay-out shows a small, excellently drawn picture of a booted damsel casting for trout in a mountain stream. Accompanying it is the caption:

Hip boots—flaming colors—a flying line and a flash of silver scales. The thrill of winning—the joy of living. And waiting at the mountain lodge, a clean cut little custom car for the fascinating journey home.

But the romantic streak in the American business man goes much deeper, it is obvious, than mere advertising. He permits himself to be worked up to private frenzies, passes them on to the consumer, and creates, thereby, what the psychologists call the Desire to Buy. Emotion, as he learned in the war, selling Liberty Bonds, is the best stimulus for getting things done. And so, in the sometimes balmy days of peace, he captures such sentiments as filial affection, love, friendship, hero-worship, and loyalty, and bends them to his uses. To stimulate the mass mind he organizes special Days, Weeks and Months; varying from National Canned Goods Week to National Music Week. His cash register clinks to an obligato, rendered very piano, of "Hearts and Flowers."

The first great Buying Festival, aside from such ancients as Christmas, was Mother's Day. This holiday was founded, without the slightest notion that it had commercial possibilities, by Miss Anna Jarvis, of Philadelphia, in 1908. Since then she has been standing on the sidelines, protesting in vehement disgust while the florists, confectioners, telegraph companies and cosmeticians have appropriated the day to their private ends. On one occasion, in 1923, she was goaded to the point where she invaded a candy men's convention and berated the learned delegates, to their shocked surprise, for working and gouging the public. So remunerative did Mother's Day become in a few years that the haberdashers and tobacconists began to reflect that fathers were also entitled to some recognition. Having hired public relations counsel, they accordingly launched Father's Day, and soon the slogans "Buy Dad a Tie" and "Give Pop a Box of Cigars" were sounding through the land. One of these merchants burst into verse:

TO DAD

It's not because you pay the bills
Or the other things you do,
But the reason why we love you, Dad,
Is just because you're YOU.

Unhappily, this humane campaign has so far met with only scant success. Its launching was greeted with jeers by the ribald editorial writers of the land, who in many cases themselves enjoyed the honors and horrors of parenthood. Father already had a day, they protested. He had, in fact, twelve every year: the first day of each month, when the bills come in! Many a dad was thus led to regard unsympathetically the efforts made to do him reverence at his own expense; even some of the haberdashers themselves have been shaken by qualms, and one or two have expressed momentary fears that they were commercializing a holy sentiment. Thus Mr. LeGrand A. Gould, president of the Associated Men's Neckwear Industries, Inc., meditated on "The Deeper Significance of Father's Day" in the May, 1927, issue of Neckwear, the War Cry of the trade:

About five years ago the first thoughts of Father's Day started percolating through my mind; at the start I rather resented the idea of commercializing Father's Day, as I have a dear old dad and also three children. But soon afterwards I happened to read an article on the crime wave that existed at the time, and the article gave statistics which proved that over 80% of the arrests were among boys and girls below the age of twenty-one. The article remained in my mind and began to associate itself with Father's Day.

When Mother's Day came along I went over to the main street of Stamford, Conn., with my two boys to buy flowers for their mother. And when I saw all the people buying flowers, I realized the wonderful happiness that the florists of the country had created for millions of mothers by causing the public to pause and pay homage to the mothers of the country. In that moment I became sincerely convinced that any effort, regardless of the motive in back of it, which will bring the boys and girls of the country to a point where they will honor their mothers and fathers to a greater degree is a worthwhile step in the right direction.

When the merchants of the country foster Father's Day, they are making a patriotic move, for the finer and nobler the ideals that are inculcated in the minds of the young, the greater and better will be the present and future generations.

"This," commented the editor of Neckwear, deeply moved, "shows the true spirit of Father's Day." "No one," he added, "can read these lines without a slight tightening of the throat, without experiencing the realization that Father's Day is a character molder of limitless possibilities, a true heightener of morale."

II

These ingenious philanthropists naturally reach their highest pitch of altruism as the third Sunday in June, now the officially designated Father's Day, draws near. Each year they perfect their organization to a greater degree, and there is now no more danger of a disaster like that of a year or two ago, when the necktie men announced that June 14 was the date and the tobacconists nominated June 21.

For months prior to Father's Day, the trade journals carry inspirational articles suggesting ways and means of putting it over with a bang. The Haberdasher and Clothier and Furnisher, a Munseyized publication of the retail trade, opened the columns of its May, 1927, issue to Mr. Gilmour F. Parker, sales manager of a chain of hat stores, for a warning to those sensitive souls who still felt they were cashing in on an artificially stimulated sentiment. Mr. Parker pointed out that Mother's Day had made vast sums for the florists, but that Father's Day was, as yet, a flop. He said:

A retailer of men's clothing here and there got behind the idea half-heartedly. A goodly number of retail clothiers, without sufficient vision to recognize a great thing when they saw it, or sufficient energy to capitalize on a great thing when they recognized it, turned over sleepily and said: "Oh, well, let's let it pass. We don't want to capitalize on mawkish sentimentality, anyway."

Which is just so much poppycock and twaddle. Father's Day, with the proper energy behind it, might easily be responsible for ten million dollars of additional business to the retail clothiers and haberdashers of America.

Mr. Parker went on to rebuke his guild-brothers for offering the wrong type of merchandise on Father's Day. The previous year, he said, the following articles had been among those most advertised as suitable gifts: two-pants suits, overcoats (reduced for next Winter), Palm Beach suits, socks, straw hats, underwear, garters, suspenders, bedroom furniture, ginger ale, and trousers. This was a grievous error, he continued. He could not vision Dad dancing with delight over a pair of garters. Father's Day, he said, "means enough in dollars and cents to be taken seriously." Prices should not be reduced. Sales should be avoided, and only high-class goods offered. "BE CAREFUL," he warned, upper case, "NOT TO MAKE THEM TOO CHEAP!"

The picture of Father, as it is held forth by the neckwear dealers, is that he is a tottering old ruin who never has any fun and whose entire function in life is to sweat cash. He always gets a dirty deal. Life, for him, is a vale of tears. This motif they sound repeatedly. I again quote from the throbbing columns of Neckwear:

In the old days Father was just the crabby man who left early in the morning and came home for supper. He used to get sore when someone gave him a present because he had to pay for it himself.

But all this, the editor insists, though he does not explain just how the Father's Day bills are to be met, has changed:

Father takes courage when he looks at the new calendar which gives him one bright Sunday in June. Does anybody disappoint the child who expectantly awaits a toy at Christmas? Will anyone disappoint Dad when the dear old man really becomes aware that for one day he is the King Pin?

We guess not!

In another issue of Neckwear Mr. I. A. Ullman gives practical hints on how to make Father's Day a roaring success. It is now firmly established, he says, and "will grow in spite of those who are still pessimists." Put half the energy into it that is burned up at Christmas and "in less than five years, the event will be as great, if not greater." He proceeds:

Put stuffers in your packages. Try and reach the school children, either through their school publications or some other method best suited to your community. Get your ministers, priests and rabbis to talk on the subject a week before. Use your head, and do everything to "put it over." It can be done.

Mr. Louis Freedom, writing in another issue, also felt that great moral importance attached itself to the day:

To impress upon the youth of America, the necessity of observing the 4th commandment—HONOR THY FATHER AND MOTHER—is the duty of every good and well-meaning citizen.

Although it may appear on the surface as the commercialization of a beautiful tribute, what better means can you employ to do your share than the use of attractive displays that "Make Dad Glad?" And what makes a man feel younger than a natty tie to spruce up his entire appearance?

The members of the Associated Neckwear Industries are doing their part by supplying you with unlimited quantities of display matter, free of charge, to enable you to do your part in this wonderful tribute. The observation of Father's Day, while primarily to uplift the ideals of young men and women of the community, will also react to your benefit in the increased sale of men's neckwear.

But probably the high spot was a verse published in one of the trade journals. It was written by Miss Clara S. McCully, a previously unknown lady poet:

ONE FOR DAD

We write much of mother
And tell how we love her,
We offer our hearts at her shrine;
We praise her ornately,
(She takes it sedately)
Hereafter it's FATHER FOR MINE!

The tobacco men, meanwhile, were not idle. Acknowledging their debt to the necktie profession, which had first conceived this wow of an idea, the cigar manufacturers kept the presses humming with posters and window-trims. "A Cigar, a Smile, Makes Life Worthwhile" was one of the nifties. Wives and children were notified, by form letter, that their husbands preferred cigars to anything else and were assured that a pleasing brand could be found.

"Be very particular," warned one of the trade papers in suggesting circular letters to be mailed by neighborhood dealers, "not to send them to homes where the father is dead, or is, for some reason, not living with his wife. This might cause hard feeling."

The credit for the inauguration of all such Days and Weeks should go, I think, to the enterprising apple-growers of the Northwest. Having first broadcast the slogan, "An Apple a Day Keeps the Doctor Away," they organized National Apple Week, with appropriate civic exercises, and the crowning of pretty girls as "Miss Apple." The celebrated Mayor Hylan of

New York City was among the first American statesmen to endorse Apple Week. The paint and varnish manufacturers followed with a Paint-up Week, and the realtors, ever up and coming, with a Better Homes Week. Canned Goods Week was then established to convince housewives that tinned stuffs were just as healthful as fresh vegetables. Thrift Week has been celebrated for several years in the name of Benjamin Franklin, but with the canny savings banks contributing their share of the expense. Last year the eminent Otto H. Kahn, LL.D., accepted the chairmanship of the committee in charge of National Music Week. He did it, apparently, to give dignity and prestige to the idea; in previous years it had been subjected to carping criticism. In 1924, for example, Deems Taylor wrote in the New York World that he could appreciate the value of National Prune Week—to the prune growers—but what, he asked, did Music Week have to do with music? It would result, he argued, only in booming the sale of radio sets, saxophones and talking machines.

Some of the special weeks are yet in their infancy. Among these is Jewish Book Week. The shoe men have, too, much work still to do to perfect National Shoe and Leather Week, and the Walk-a-Mile-a-Day movement. They find consolation, however, in the success of their motto, "Walk and Be Healthy." It has inspired numerous Y.M.C.A. athletic directors to lecture on the value of wearing out shoe leather. The shoe men launched the idea because a nation addicted to automobiles was buying fewer shoes. Sauerkraut Week represents an effort to heal the wounds of the late war. So does Pretzel Week.

III

Even the great public service corporations, pictured by cartoonists in the radical press as beefy old gentlemen smoking fat cigars, have demonstrated that beneath their rough exteriors their hearts are soft. In May of this year, as a proof of it, the celebrated Western Union Telegraph Company printed, at great expense, a monograph describing the boyhood home of John Howard Payne at Easthampton, L. I. This, as is the custom of the company, was distributed to the newspapers, with the notation that editors were at liberty to reprint all or any part of it. One section read:

Nothing of a formal nature has been done to connect the author of "Home Sweet Home" officially with Mother's Day, yet many people feel that there is an inescapable appropriateness in such connection. What could be more fitting, they ask, than to associate with that day the song that is perhaps the best known in America, and which more clearly than any other gives expression to the thoughts which observance of that day engenders? With Mother's Day recognized officially throughout the United States, and with millions of Americans observing it in telegrams or letters, why shouldn't recognition be accorded the author of the song which has fixed the sentiment imperishably in the minds of Americans?

The italics are mine.

On Mother's Day the windows of the company's offices throughout the Republic were decorated with reproductions of Whistler's familiar portrait of his mother. The blanks on which messages were received and delivered that day were embellished with a drawing of the Payne house at Easthampton and the words "Mother's Day Greeting." On the counters were booklets with an assortment of refined sentiments for the benefit of customers unable to compose their own. The sentiment factory of the Western Union has, in fact, become a very vital part of the system, and soon, no doubt, another vice-president will be elected and placed in charge of it. Booklets containing suggested messages have been prepared for Christmas, New Year, Easter, St. Valentine's Day, Thanksgiving Day, Mother's Day and Yom Kippur. Another pamphlet, available at all hours of the day and night, has an assortment of ready-to-serve sentiments for every conceivable purpose; births, deaths, weddings, christenings, birthdays and miscellaneous anniversaries. There are messages to be sent to public men elected to high office and to other public men booted out to make places for them. There are pep messages for despatch to members of the varsity eleven preparing to die on the gridiron for Dear Old (insert name of college or prep school here). And there are, of course, messages of joy (or gloom) to facilitate the work of plastered alumni after the game.

Certain vile words, such as "damn" and "Hell" are barred from the wires of the telegraph companies. Sweet sentiments, however, speed over them like arrows in flight. Following are two of the gems prepared by the gag-men of the Western Union for the St. Valentine's Day rush:

Thinkin' a little, wishin' a little,
Far off and blue;
Hopin' a little, sighin' a little
Lonesome for you.

Not from the whole wide world I chose thee;
The wide, wide world could not enclose thee,
For thou art the whole wide world to me.

The Postal Telegraph-Cable Company, less of a pioneer in the field than the Western Union, is now also providing form telegrams. Both companies, it develops, are earning extra dividends because they have kind hearts. The records of the Western Union show that in 1926-27 175,476 residents of New York City used the wires to convey Christmas and New Year messages, most of them from the booklets of the company. This was an increase of 17% over the previous year and an increase of 86% over 1925. The gain throughout the country has been 200% in the last five years. The St. Valentine's Day business of 1926 leaped 47% over the peak of 1925. Clerks are still tabulating the returns for last February.

Many of the messages turned out for the benefit of those to whom original composition is a strain are longer than the standard ten words. But the companies, with a magnificent gesture of generosity, charge no more. One understands this generosity better on learning that each greeting in the booklet has a number, so that nothing but that number, with the name and address of the recipient and the name of the sender, has to be transmitted over the wires. This explains also, how such fancy sentiments in verse as "Thinkin' a little" can be despatched without getting all snarled up.

Probably the smartest idea that the Western Union's sentiment factory has yet evolved was to offer a set of congratulatory messages to the nation, swept as it was by an unprecedented enthusiasm, to send to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh upon his arrival in Washington. These sentiments, often exceeding ten words in length but offered at the base rate, were available in every telegraph office in the United States, with delivery guaranteed on the day that the young flier landed from the Memphis. A total of 55,000 of them piled up at Washington. They were loaded on a truck, taken down to the wharf when the cruiser docked, and trundled after Lindbergh in the parade to the White House. If the Colonel ever read them, which is extremely unlikely, he must have been startled by the fact that there were no more than ten varieties among the 55,000. One telegram, from Minneapolis, had 17,500 signatures and was on a scroll 520 feet long. Ten messenger boys staggered under it.

The Postal Telegraph Company also provided predigested messages for Col. Lindbergh. Thereby, alas, it injured the feelings of its rival, for its sentiments were, almost word for word, identical with those of the Western Union.

IV

The ramifications of this new heart-throb industry are, it is obvious, unending. But no account of them can be even partially complete without credit to the small and select group of men who manufacture and sell greeting cards. Prior to 1918, according to an article written for Printers' Ink by Mr. R. W. Hicks, secretary-treasurer of the Greeting Card Association, comparatively few messages of cheer and good-will were produced in America. Most of them, used chiefly at Christmas, New Year and Easter, were imported from Germany and England.

Then came the World War, the transformation of the Christmas card factories abroad into poisoned gas and bomb plants and a shut-down in importations. Rallying in this crisis, the alert entrepreneurs of America began manufacturing on their own account. Things were just going well when the United States got into the scrap, and the more passionate patriots began saying that the money being spent for these baubles might better be used to repel the Hun. Says Mr. Hicks:

Manufacturers seized on this argument however, and turned it in their favor. They felt that cards could play a part in keeping up morale and they decided to do something to combat comment unfavorable to the industry. The Greeting Card Association planned to show that cards could do two things; First, keep up the spirits of the people at home, and second, they could be used to remember the boys in service and keep up their spirits, too.

And so the boom was born, with the approval, no doubt, of the Hon. S. Stanwood Menken, of the National Security League, and Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer. To-day, encouraged by the slogan, "Scatter Sunshine with Greeting Cards," the infant industry includes 35 to 40 manufacturers, employs 5,000 workers and brings in about $55,000,000 a year. Through the efforts of the Greeting Card Association the kindly ear of Congress was reached, and now a 45% ad valorem duty removes the possibility that the English or Germans will ever recapture the field. Like the telegraph companies, the greeting card men take care that their fellow-Americans remember all appropriate days of felicitation. A statement of the aims, accomplishments and ideals of the Association, also prepared by Mr. Hicks, says:

Not only are his [the potential customer's] affections properly budgetted, but his days as well. Indeed, so rapidly are the days of the year being appropriated by mothers, fathers, babies, grandmothers, homecomings, graduations and all sorts of hails and farewells, that the wonder is how long will our 365 days remain with us, and what shall we do then?

Going frankly into the secrets of the trade, Mr. Hicks reveals the fact that "to manufacture a successful line of greeting cards, the very best artists and verse writers are an absolute necessity, and the manufacturer has consciously developed into an Art Publisher." The heavy advance work for the Christmas trade is done from February to August and artists sweat over snow scenes during the dog days.

One frequently hears questions as to what has become of the valentines and Christmas cards of years ago, with paper lace, doves, opening doors and other frills. They are gone, definitely gone. There has entered in their place the Greeting Card with its bustling self-confidence and efficiency.

The individual, romantic or otherwise, who now wishes to send any sort of message whatever to any person may go into a store and obtain his sentiments all ready, printed and waiting for him, his ardor no longer determined by the prosperity of his Muse, but of his pocketbook.

The Greeting Card Association, with its eye on vastly increased sales, has been energetic in calling the attention of the public to persons previously unsuspected of a weakness for greetings. It persuaded Miss Elsie Ferguson to pose for an advertisement in which she said:

How happy we stage folks are when we know that people appreciate our efforts. It repays us for all the hard work, the long hours of rehearsal and the tiresome travel.

And by appreciation I don't mean just applause in the theater. I mean also the greetings we receive from people. I treasure these expressions of appreciation among my most beloved possessions.

Believe me, nothing is so heartening as to learn that someone, somewhere, believes in you enough to send you a card.

Many other actors and actresses, some of them of the screen, have also voiced their yearning for greeting cards, and no doubt they now receive large numbers of them from their admirers. Other great public figures, also in advertisements, have likewise consented to endorse the plan. Dr. Frank Crane, for example, urges the public to "spread good will at Easter." Miss Julia Hoyt says it is well to "cherish friendship as one of life's greatest joys." Similarly lofty ideas are expressed by Dorothy Dix, "a mother to millions," David Belasco, "who never forgets a friend," and Dr. Henry van Dyke.

So numerous have become the days appropriate for greeting card deluges and so complicated the problems relating to their proper observance that the Greeting Card Association has published a guide-book entitled "Greeting Cards: When and How to Use Them." This volume, written by Miss Anne Rittenhouse, a student of etiquette, is sold at the nominal price of twenty-five cents. Miss Rittenhouse grows poetic as she develops her happy theme:

How cheerily the postman's whistle echoes through the street! Thrillingly and happily it heralds friendliness, the friendliness of greetings from far-off folks who, though half a world apart, yet companion us in all our greatest hours.

Like shuttles flying back and forth, cards of greeting weave the fabric of friendship, and as they fly they flash reflections of sunshine into many shaded hours of life.

For friendship is one of the greatest things in the world—it is the silver lining that lightens the cloud of sorrow, the pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow.

In these hurrying times, we need frequent reminders of those quiet friendships that lie to windward of our souls, like anchors of steadfastness. The busiest people most appreciate that "a man should keep his friendships in constant repair."

Abandoning her lyre for a moment, Miss Rittenhouse then gives a short history of her subject. From "the dawn of history, when stone-age men chiseled upon prominent boulders the first intelligent messages of the adolescent world, until now, greetings of one sort or another have changed the whole tenor of history," she writes. Runners passed between "king and king, and chief and chief, carrying the greetings of kings." The Apostle James (who ought to be enshrined as the patron saint of the Greeting Card Association) wrote: "To the twelve tribes, which are scattered abroad, greetings." The first Christmas card of the modern type came much later, though. It was designed, Miss Rittenhouse has discovered, by J. C. Horsley, R.A., for Sir Henry Cole. That was in England and in the year 1846. She goes on:

It might be far easier to list the people to whom you should not send greeting cards. Every friend of yours is delighted to be remembered and many acquaintances who are not within your intimate circle are pleased to hear from you. All greetings are appreciated, no matter by whom they are received, but probably the most appreciative are the aged, the sick, and the lonely.

Children, of course, are always delighted to have letters or cards come through the mails. And shall we not speak of mothers who think constantly of absent children separated from them by space but not by interests? And fathers? Of course they are just as delighted as mothers to hear from the boys and girls who have gone away from home.

Of all greetings the one most welcome is the unexpected greeting—the one that comes on some day of gray disillusionment with a gay little chuckle of its own. Laughter and cheeriness are contagious.

But I must not give the impression that the Greeting Card Book of Etiquette offers nothing but poetic thoughts. Those who spend their two bits in the hope that it contains hints on how to do the correct thing receive, at the least, full value for their money. One of the “first courtesies in the sending of greeting cards” warns Miss Rittenhouse, “is to be sure that the name and address are correct.” Greeting cards “should never be addressed by typewriter.” No card should be mailed “on which either the signature on the card nor the address on the envelope is blotted.” They are “entitled to the same respect and dignity” as are letters.

Minute directions are offered by Miss Rittenhouse for sending cards to the President of the United States, the Vice-President, the members of the Supreme Court, the gentlemen of Congress, and officers in the Army and Navy. Careful distinctions are drawn between “formal and informal” cards. It is possible, one finds, to use cards for many hitherto unexpected purposes: for wedding announcements, to acknowledge week-ends, and to express gratitude for gifts. Miss Rittenhouse is an honest expert, however, and demonstrates in the volume that she is in no way under the thumb of her employers. For some purposes, she admits, personal letters should follow the greeting cards.

AMERICANA

ALABAMA

A CORRESPONDENT of the Sylacauga Advantage tackles and disposes of a difficult subject:

Death is a sting, because we do not understand it. It is also a privilege, because while those who pass through its vale can not come back; those left behind can go to those gone before. Therefore, it would seem at least that its sting is lost in the revelation of its privilege. We cannot call back those who are left on to the life eternal, that they enjoy in the presence and fellowship of the Master while we mourn, as is but natural, the passing of their dear little friend, faithful over a few things here; we cherish the fact that she has but recently been made ruler over many, and that we, like her, if we profit by His example, using the Christian virtues and ideas as our criterion, that we, too, can welcome the grim tyrant (death) as a kind messenger, sent to translate us from this imperfect to that all-perfect, glorious and celestial, beyond where cares and troubles are not known, where partings do not come, but to live for ever in the joys of our Lord.

CONTRIBUTION to Alabama folk-lore by the editor of the eminent Athens Courier:

A Negro, when asked what he thought of the drink just given him, said: "Just right, boss; just right! Ef it had been any worse it would have kilt me, and ef it had been any better I never would have gotten it."

CALIFORNIA

TRIBUTE to a holy man in the B'nai Brith of Los Angeles:

Sinai Congregation of Los Angeles
Is enjoyed and elates,
That her leader, Rabbi Mayer Winkler,
Became a citizen of the United States.

Being in America only 5½ years,
He masters the language so well,
His speeches are very enjoyable,
Those who heard him will tell.

He is an ornament to the community,
Has a high and brilliant mind,
Such a man as Rabbi Mayer Winkler
Is not so easy to find.

Sinai Congregation is very fortunate,
Such a leader to possess,
In every way and manner,
He is a perfect success.

May he live many years,
The leader of the Congregation to be,
May he and his family,
Have a life full of glee.

PHONOLOGICAL note by the music critic of the Herald, of the same dreadful town:

Miss Elsa Alsen was in the city today, completing arrangements for her appearance with the Los Angeles Civic Opera Company. She is a lively woman, with mischievous brown eyes, and a rich Nordic accent.

ANTHEM of the Fresno Rotary Club, sung to the tune of "Oh, It Ain't Gonna Rain No More":

Oh, there ain't no flies on us.
There ain't no flies on us:
There may be flies on some of you guys,
But there ain't no flies on us.
Oh, there ain't no crumbs on us.
There ain't no crumbs on us:
There may be crumbs on some of you bums,
But there ain't no crumbs on us.
Oh, there ain't no bugs on us,
There ain't no bugs on us;
There may be bugs on some of your mugs,
But there ain't no bugs on us.

THE Hon. Samuel G. Mortland, speaking before the leaders of the furniture profession assembled in convention in San Francisco:

The newspaper is the finest institution of learning in the United States today. Four years of conscientious and thoughtful study of the papers will give a young man a broader education than can be gained in any university.

CONNECTICUT

THE Hon. Louis M. Pawlett, secretary of the Bridgeport Rotary Club:

I believe that in back of Rotary there is something bigger and broader and finer than anything that has ever been given to mankind before.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

SPECIMEN of the confidential information sent out to the gaping Babbitts of the Republic by the Hon. Fred H. Marvin, head of the Key Men of America, an organization of patriots:

The division which has come in the Protestant churches of the world between those called Fundamentalists and those called Modernists is a clever Socialist-Communist movement. The Fundamentalists, who remain strict in the creed, likewise refuse to be swept off their feet by the emotional cries of "no more war" or the more subtle, but none the less deadly slogan, "production for use, not for profit." The inception, the dictation, the suggestions for Modernism, as it is expressed in the Protestant churches today, will be found in the literature of the Socialist-Communist groups.

THE principles of Hearst Journalism, as set forth in a memorandum for the reporters of the Washington Times:

The Washington Times should be full of bright, snappy, interesting local stories.

We have a natural tendency to place emphasis on matters which are ponderous, dull and uninteresting. We must resist this tendency.

We must consider that the COMPOSITE newspaper reader does not care a hang about tax rates, budgets, insurance, disarmament, naval appropriations, public utilities policies, municipal improvements, or scores of other subjects which may appear to be important.

Newspaper readers are most interested in stories which contain the elements most dominant in the primitive emotions of themselves, namely:

1. SELF-PRESERVATION.
2. LOVE, OR REPRODUCTION.
3. AMBITION.

Stories containing one of these elements are good; those which contain two of the elements are better; those which contain all three elements form first-class newspaper material.

SELF-PRESERVATION—Under this heading come stories of murder, suicide, rescues, accidents, fights, facts as to health, food, liquor, etc.

LOVE, OR REPRODUCTION—This element is contained in stories of marriage, scandal, divorce, human triangles, romances, unusual acts done with love motive, jealousy, sex attraction, etc.

AMBITION—The ambition element is contained in articles tending to stimulate the reader to emulate the activity of a character in the story. Sports come under this classification.

The ambition element is aroused, also, by the mystery factor in a story. Mystery forms a challenge to the intelligence, and it thus stimulates the reader to buy further editions to note whether his solution, perhaps unconsciously made, is verified.

For example: The Hall-Mills story contained all three major-interest elements. The killings provided the self-preservation element. The intimacy of the preacher with Mrs. Mills introduced the love element. The mystery of who did the killings, why and how, challenged the intelligence and fired the reader's ambition to solve the problem.

Let us write our stories for the COMPOSITE reader.

Let us minimize stories which do not carry the major-interest elements. Let us disregard, or cover perfunctorily, subjects which are merely important, but not interesting.

Let the same principles apply to headline writing, selection and editing of telegraph news and departmental features.

A bonus of $5 will be paid for the best written local story each week, until further notice. The city editor will be the judge.

A bonus of $5 will be paid the copy desk for the best headline of the week. This will be awarded by a vote of the copy editors, the head of the desk to cast two votes if necessary to break a tie.

AVERY C. MARKS, JR.

FLORIDA

THE state of civilization in this incomparable commonwealth.

"Obscene, vile and vicious" books are being kept in the libraries of the Florida State College for Women at Tallahassee and the University of Florida at Gainesville, in violation of the State's criminal code, it was charged by a citizens' committee headed by L. A. Tatum, an elder of the Presbyterian church of this city, and A. Pichard, deacon of the First Baptist Church, before the State Board of Education, in session here yesterday.

The committee had prepared a typewritten report of seventeen pages containing quotations of objectionable passages compiled from books in use in the two institutions. Many of the passages relating to sex were highly obscene, the committee charged.

Among the authors mentioned in the committee report were Freud, Van Tieslar, F. H. Allport, Edward A. Ross, G. Stanley Hall, Bertrand Russell, George Bernard Shaw and Upton Sinclair.

GEORGIA

THE Hon. Morgan Blake, sports editor of the celebrated Atlanta Journal:

Jesus Christ was the Greatest Sportsman Who ever lived.

THE editor of the Dahlonega Nugget tells his woes to his readers:

The doctor said we didn't have enough teeth to chew our food properly. So after due consideration we decided that a metal food chopper would be more serviceable and cheaper than a set hammered out of a gold nugget by a dentist, and now have one on hand, fastened to the table by our side and by turning the crank can grind our beans, chicken and dumplings in any quantity desired without tiring our jaws the least bit, or having any pain in our head, body or toe nails.

ILLINOIS

EXTRACT from an article by the Hon. Roger Sherman, president of the Illinois

State Bar Association, in the American Law Review:

Successful lawyers, in the last analysis, are nothing but good salesmen. That statement may shock some of us, but it is a fact. Life itself, from the cradle to the grave is nothing but salesmanship in the last analysis. The baby sells its parents at the outset. That is an easy proposition in most cases. They are usually sold in advance. Nevertheless he does sell them and sell them completely; the child comes along and he sells his companions. He tries to make them think that he is a pretty agreeable kind of a boy, if he is a boy. Then he must sell his teachers, and he usually does sell them. When he gets a little older, and picks out some particular girl, he has the task of selling himself to her. Practicing law is practicing salesmanship.

YELLS prepared for the use of pupils in Daily Vacation Bible Schools by the national headquarters of the W. C. T. U. at Christian Evanston:

Down with the bootlegger!
Up with the law!
Vote for Law Enforcement!
Rah! Rah! Rah!

Beer and wine—never, never, never!
Boys and girls—ever, ever, ever!
Beer and whiskey—both a curse!
I drink water—safety first!

KENTUCKY

THE Hon. Clarence C. Hieatt, of Louisville, president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards:

I always insist that the business of the realtor in all of its many phases is the most complex and difficult, and therefore the most interesting activity of man—that because of this, the appeal it makes should attract the interest and stir the ambition of the finest brains in the world. In no other field of human endeavor is there the same opportunity for the application of high vision, ripened judgment and tireless energy.

MARYLAND FREE STATE

REASSURING card in the celebrated Crisfield Times:

COMMUNICATED

To whom it may concern:

We, the undersigned, who have been guests at the Rectory of St. John's many times, wish to state:

First, That there has been no gambling, or crap shooting.

Second, That any curious person may come and visit the Rectory and investigate for themselves.

Third, Persons circulating any such malicious rumors are either mistaken or deliberately misrepresenting conditions.

Signed:

WILSON WARD,
L. JEFFERSON FIELDS,
ROGER RIGGIN,
NORMAN BELL,
MELVIN E. TULL,
CLAYTON TYLER,
LITTLETON T. DRYDEN,
THOMAS LONDON,
LEROY HINMAN,
TOM RIGGIN,
NORRIS ENNIS,
R. G. SOMERS,
JOHN HOLLAND.

REASSURING words from a correspondent of Hearst's Baltimore American:

I wish to state that local Law Enforcement has been a success. Baltimore is now as dry as it was before Prohibition.

MASSACHUSETTS

EXULTANT dithyrambs printed on the front page of Industry, the organ of the Associated Industries of this great State, five days after Sacco and Vanzetti were bumped off:

Old Massachusetts, there she stands!
A flaming sword within her hands—
A beacon light to other lands,
Massachusetts, there she stands.
The citadel of Liberty,
Home of the brave, State of the free—
The Shield of true democracy,
Massachusetts, there she stands.

O Massachusetts, loved and fair!
To thee allegiance now we swear;
For law and order still to dare,
That right may flourish everywhere.
What tho' disloyal, ruffian bands
Assail thy fame with blood-red hands!
Eternal truth our faith commands—
Massachusetts, there she stands!

MICHIGAN

HUMAN progress in the great city of Detroit, as described by a reader of the New Republic:

With the automobile, one single type was attracted to Detroit in a sort of gold-rush; the young, hustling, industrial go-getter came in such numbers that neither he nor his family could be assimilated into that group that normally leads in a city's æsthetic enrichment. He wasn't interested in Detroit; he had no roots there; he was, and is, content to make his money there without intention of making it his home or of caring that it should become the kind of place he would enjoy as a home. These newcomers, holding the balance of power, have been content to see the city lose much of its charm and seemliness; trees are gone, ugliness is everywhere in a mushroom growth of cheap buildings; dirt and untidiness are the despair of an overworked board of health, politics are well meaning but impotent, and a tolerable climate has been murked with a smoke pall that rivals Pittsburgh, without Pittsburgh's excuse. Even the water supply is flavored with a colicky chlorine; in fact, anything goes that does not interfere with production.

NEBRASKA

LITERARY criticism by the erudite chief editorial writer of the Alliance Times-Herald, one of the leading papers of this great State:

At last we've scanned "Elmer Gantry," the new tirade by Upton Sinclair. It's just like "The Brass Check," "The Jungle," and many other books by the man with the great pet peeve. He wrote "The Brass Check" because the newspapers refused to print his guff in the form of signed interviews. He wrote "The Jungle" because he was sore at the packers, and now some minister must have offended him and he has written a story that is an insult to the noblest profession on God's green earth. Here and there we find an Elmer Gantry in every walk of life. Alliance had one. But he no more represented the ministry of this or any other city than a flea represents a collie dog. Sinclair has made light of the small town, the business men's clubs and every organization except the Reds. He is becoming a national menace, and the only way to curb him is to refuse to buy his printed spleen.

NEW YORK

VARIATIONS upon Jeremiah LI, 8-13, by the editor of the eminent Babylon Leader:

People of Babylon: We have in our midst a team of young men who beat a team which ranks with College Point, Port Washington and other strong teams, and still we do not notice them, encourage them. We say Babylon is progressing. Truly so, but in what trend? Babylon is progressing materially only and not spiritually. In this fast developing community, the foundation of true America, the national sport of true America, baseball, is being allowed to die out due to non-support. Are we so grossly imbued in the practice of material gain that we cannot devote a little spare time, a few spare words in the encouragement of local baseball?

LUSH prose from the mighty pen of the chief editorial writer of the Syracuse Journal:

The Rev. Dr. Adolph Guttman, spiritual guide and Jewish leader, has gone to eternal sleep. His life as minister and man was exotic as the blush rose in the garden of time.

CANNED pep messages kindly prepared for illiterate collegians by the staff literati of the Western Union Telegraph Company:

We are behind you for victory. Bring home the bacon.

Give them everything you have. We expect you home as victors.

. is behind you, rooting for victory. Fight with everything you have and bring home the bacon.

We are proud of you. Make us doubly proud today by a victorious game.

.s teams are never known as losers. We are rooting for you to keep that reputation and bring home the bacon. Here's to victory.

Everyone in is with you today, rooting for victory. Fight with everything you have boys and bring back victory.

INCIDENT in the life of a great American thinker, as recorded by the Hon. Vincent Treanor in the eminent Evening World:

Tunney lay on the rubbing board in the dressing-room at Stroudsburg. The room was filled with Gene's friends and well-wishers. Lou Fink, the trainer, was working over his charge when he walked Jimmy Bronson. He looked at Gene admiringly.

"Gene," he began without any ceremony, "you are a man of destiny. God put a figure in uniform in that war over there to acquit himself with glory and then come back to win the championship. Gene, you are that man. The mantle fits you."

The little speech was impressively rendered. Jimmy Eagleton, the Greenwich Village boyhood pal of Tunney, bowed his head reverently. Dudley Field Malone, sitting in a rocker, and certainly not given to mawkish sentiment, nodded in seeming belief. Others received the solemn declaration in respectful silence. Tunney rolled over on his side. He looked searchingly at Bronson, but said nothing.

The writer thought that from that moment Tunney had a different aspect. Apparently lethargic, at least to us, he became more spirited. There was more pep to his sparring bouts. He landed on the big and little bags more studiously and with unmistakable deliberation. He was, if anything, more cheerful. No one knows what he thought before that, but now he began to fairly exude confidence.

FROM a list of prizes offered for solid contributions to the fine arts:

SEVEN THOUSAND DOLLARS, donated to the Art Center of New York by Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., will be used to provide prizes for the best architectural suggestions for improved hot dog stands.

NORTH CAROLINA

NET results of Law Enforcement in the principality of the Hon. Josephus Daniels, as reported by the Hickory correspondent of the Winston-Salem Journal:

Corn liquor has reached the lowest price in years in Western North Carolina, according to persons familiar with the market price of the fluid. Gallon lots, according to the best reports, are being sold as cheaply as $5 retail. The average, these reports say, is between $6 and $7 per gallon, delivered at the door. Chief of Police E. W. Lentz told the City Council that persons whom he arrested on charges pertaining to the Volstead law had given him information that Western North Carolina's purest could be purchased at $1 per pint, which is about half the price of two years ago.

OHIO

HYMENEAL luxury among the high-toned Aframericans of Cincinnati, as described by the correspondent there of the eminent Pittsburg Courier:

Notable and unique among the wedding gifts was the wedding cake, the most elaborate which has ever graced a similar occasion in Cincinnati. Representatives from every leading hotel and bakery in the city, having heard of it, had called to marvel at its size and exquisite workmanship and to question its baker, who stood by its side. Tier on tier this wonderful piece of pastry rose until it reached the height of four feet, adorned by wedding bells and a miniature bride and groom and surrounded by an enclosed park, built of loaf sugar, with tiny porticos and a brown sugar driveway, while on each side were pools with live gold fish swimming about.

OKLAHOMA

THE Hon. Henry S. Johnston, Governor of this illustrious commonwealth, as reported by the Oklahoma News, of Oklahoma City:

Predicting the second coming of Christ as a certainty, scoring Modernists and critics of the Bible, Governor Henry S. Johnston addressed the congregation of the Capitol Hill Christian Church Sunday night. "Christ is coming again," he said. "It may take 500 or 1000 years, but He is coming."

OREGON

THE mind of the American policeman, as disclosed by a Corvallis dispatch:

Although authorities in the city are holding James Parker on suspicion that he may be Harry Hill, wanted at Streator, Illinois, for killing his mother, doubt that he is the Chicago youth was expressed today as description of him shows that he is two inches shorter than Hill. Police believe, however, that he is wanted in Chicago for something, basing this opinion on his unwillingness to talk.

PENNSYLVANIA

THE Leaders of Thought of Harrisburg cut loose at the Shriners' convention at Atlantic City:

Zembo Temple plans one of the most unique stunts in the entire session. This will take place tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock, when its various units will march up the beach front from their headquarters to the Steel Pier all in red bathing suits. The Zembo Band of seventy pieces and the bugle and drum corps will furnish music while the drill units go through their unique maneuvers. Following this they will form in a straight line in number nearly 200 and in this formation march into the water until nothing but their heads will be visible.

SOUTH DAKOTA

ANATOMICAL and pathological marvel reported by the Geddes News:

Will Clark, while helping to take down the chautauqua tent, fell on a piece of glass and severely cut his wrist near the jugular vein.

TENNESSEE

News dispatch from Knoxville, known the world over for the high moral level of its citizenry:

Herbert C. Sanford, teacher of the A B C Bible Class, returned to Knoxville last night after a four weeks vacation trip that carried him to Florida, the Isle of Pines, New York City, Atlantic City, Washington, points along the Atlantic Coast and North Carolina cities. During his absence Mr. Sanford spent more than four hours each day writing post cards to friends and acquaintances and members of the Bible class.

VIRGINIA

ROTARIAN Joseph Turner, of Roanoke, as reported by the World-News:

Rotary is not built around material progress. It is merely one posture of the soul.

WASHINGTON

CULTURAL news from the celebrated town of Olympia, capital of this great State:

After months devoted to State-wide tours on which he boasted that under no circumstances would he give his approval to contracts calling for the purchase of expensive spittoons for the new Capitol building, Governor Roland H. Hartley, by his own free will and volition, without coercion or intimidation, has attached his signature to a voucher calling for the purchase of 56 cuspidors, four to cost $100 each and the remaining 52 to cost $14 apiece. The four large ones are of bronze and will go in the main rotunda of the Capitol; the smaller ones are for the various offices.

PROFESSOR JERRY THOMAS

BY HERBERT ASBURY

THE Lord smiled benevolently upon the city of New Haven, Connecticut, on a stormy Winter's night in 1825, and His official tot-bearer, the stork, rode the gale from Heaven and deposited a little stranger within the humble cottage home of Mr. and Mrs. William Daniel Thomas, respectable though pious people, who were ever ready to drop a coin into the collection plate or provide a fried chicken for the pastor. They gazed upon the infant in bewildered but worshipping awe, and listened raptly to the wails which racked his puny frame. They named him Jeremiah.

"We'll make him a preacher," said Mr. Thomas. "Or a professor," he added, thinking of the adjacent Yale College and the dignified savants of the faculty.

"A preacher," Mrs. Thomas decided, and murmured ecstatically. "The Reverend Jeremiah Thomas! Oh, Will, maybe a D.D.!"

"Of course," agreed Mr. Thomas. "By all means a D.D."

But, alas, for the fond hopes of doting parents! A power transcending that of man had decreed the fate of the innocent babe, and no such exalted destiny had been plotted for him upon the heavenly charts. He did not become the Rev. Jeremiah Thomas; it was not written that he should receive and interpret, and, when necessary, amend the commands and wishes of the Almighty. Nor did he become a teacher at Yale, although the Yale boys learned much from him before he left New Haven to give his message to the world. Instead he became simply Jerry Thomas—but for more than three score years he lived a life of singular usefulness, and blessed many communities with the abundance of his service. He was a great artist with a touch of true genius, and the importance of his influence upon the gentler and more æsthetic aspects of American culture has been neither properly recognized nor adequately estimated. Indeed, he lies in an obscure grave, untopped by granite shaft or public memorial.

Briefly, Jerry Thomas was a bartender. But what a bartender! His name should never be mentioned in the same breath with that of the frowsy gorilla who, in these dark days of Prohibition, may be found lounging behind the bar of a dingy basement speakeasy, sloshing luke-warm ginger-ale into a dirty glass half-filled with raw alcohol, and then calling the unspeakable concoction a drink. Jerry Thomas had nothing in common with this Volsteadian simian; there is no more a basis for comparing them than there is for comparing Michael Angelo to Bud Fisher, or Dante to Eddie Guest. For Jerry Thomas was neither frowsy nor an ape; he was, indeed, an imposing and lordly figure of a man (Homo sapiens), portly, sleek and jovial, and yet possessed of immense dignity. A jacket of pure and spotless white encased his great bulk, and a huge and handsome mustache, neatly trimmed in the arresting style called walrus, adorned his lip and lay caressingly athwart his plump and rosy cheeks. He presented an inspiring spectacle as he leaned upon the polished mahogany of his bar, amid the gleam of polished silver and cut glass, and impressively pronounced the immemorial greeting, "What will it be, gentlemen?"—a sacred rite which the modern poison slinger has corrupted into a swipe at a pine board with a greasy cloth and a peevish, "Whatcha want, gents? Hooch?"

In these decayed and evangelical times, when drinking has reverted to a savage guzzling of liquid dynamite, the name of Jerry Thomas arouses no answering spark of manhood from the craven victims of bootleg liquor or the cowed and beaten slaves who labor in the gloomy galleys of the Anti-Saloon League. But to the ancients who weep beside the bier of a lost art it brings back beautiful memories of golden fizzes and stimulating juleps, of cobblers, slings and sangarees. For Jerry Thomas was the greatest drink mixer of his age; his praises were sung by enlightened and Christian men from the Gulf of Mexico to the barren coast of Maine, and from the Golden Gate to Broadway. Aye, even in Europe he was recognized as a master craftsman; he visited Liverpool, Southampton, London and Paris in 1859, bearing with him his magnificent set of solid silver bar utensils, constructed at a cost of $4,000 for his own personal use, and astounded the effete drinkers of the Old World with the variety and extent of his virtuosity.

It was Jerry Thomas—rise, please—who invented those celebrated cold weather beverages which have come down to us as the blue blazer and the Tom and Jerry, the former a powerful concoction of burning whiskey and boiling water which, if properly employed, would render the hot water bottle obsolete. And it was Jerry Thomas who, a few years before the Civil War, gave the aid and encouragement of his genius to the cocktail, then a meek and lowly beverage pining for recognition and appreciation, and by self-sacrificing work in the laboratory raised it to its rightful place among the drinks. A perfect flood of new mixtures soon showered upon a delighted world, and the Metropolitan Hotel at Prince street and Broadway, in New York, where Jerry was Principal Bartender in the days when New York was the scene of the soundest drinking on earth, became the first great cocktail house.

As a mark of gratitude for his invention of the Tom and Jerry and the blue blazer, and for his researches in the field of the cocktail, his host of admirers invested him with the honorable, if honorary, title of Professor, by which he was thereafter known, and which he carried with becoming dignity through the remainder of his earthly pilgrimage. Thus he fulfilled one of the ambitions which his father had expressed for him as he lay, a helpless little one, in the cradle of the New Haven cottage. But the church, ever an obstacle to human progress, failed to recognize his genius.

II

But it was not only as a scientist and beverage dispenser that Professor Thomas deserves a monument and the plaudits which are now wasted upon generals, bishops, movie actors, channel swimmers and aviators, for his interests were numerous and his fame in other lines was great; in many different ways, indeed, he lent force and direction to the cultural advance of the nation. He was a pioneer minstrel showman of the Pacific Coast, and owned a music hall in New York wherein Lew Dockstader began the career which was to make him the most celebrated minstrel man of his time; and he sponsored the first public exhibition of Thomas Nast's cartoons, and did much to popularize the work of that famous artist. And he also achieved renown as a collector; he owned more than three hundred gourds, of every conceivable shape and size, the finest and most important group of these natural curiosities in the United States, if not in the world. Indeed, the collection may well have been unique. Moreover, he was an author whose works have been sadly neglected by the critics, even by those high-powered, super-intellectuals among them who possess the occult power of reading things in a book that the writer never heard of. These giants sing the praises of realism, yet they have persistently ignored the product of one of the few men who were ever able to make the real even more so, and who at the same time could take a frightened, trembling wretch and by the skillful application of a cocktail, a cobbler, a julep or a sangaree, sweetened to his taste, transform him into a stalwart hero, eager and able to bear the world upon his shoulders. The attention of these critics is respectfully invited to the volume into which Professor Thomas poured the vials of his wisdom, nay, his very soul, and published under this simple title:

HOW TO MIX DRINKS,

or,

THE BON VIVANT'S COMPANION

Containing Clear and Reliable Directions for Mixing all the Beverages Used in the United States, Together with the Most Popular British, French, German, Italian, Russian and Spanish Recipes, Embracing Punches, Juleps, Cobblers, etc., etc., in Endless Variety.

By JERRY THOMAS

Formerly Principal Bartender at the Metropolitan Hotel, New York, and the Planters' House, St. Louis.

TO WHICH IS APPENDED

A MANUAL FOR THE MANUFACTURE
of

CORDIALS, LIQUORS, FANCY SYRUPS, ETC., ETC.,
After the Most Approved Methods Now Used in the Distillation of Liquors and Beverages, Designed for the Special Use of Manufacturers and Dealers in Wines and Spirits, Grocers, Tavern Keepers and Private Families, the Same Being Adapted to the Trade of the United States and Canada.

ILLUSTRATED WITH DESCRIPTIVE ENGRAVINGS.

The Whole Containing
OVER 600 VALUABLE RECIPES.

By CHRISTIAN SCHULTZ,

Professor of Chemistry, Apothecary and Manufacturer of Wines, Liquors, Cordials, etc., etc., from Berne, Switzerland.

This erudite work first appeared early in 1862, and quickly went through half a dozen large printings. Said the preface to the first edition:

It struck us that a list of all the social drinks—the composite beverages, if we may call them so—of America, would really be one of the curiosities of jovial literature; and that if it was combined with a catalogue of the mixtures common to other nations, and made practically useful by the addition of a concise description of the various processes for brewing each, it would be a blessing to mankind. There would be no excuse for imbibing, with such a book at hand, the villainous compounds of bar-keeping Goths and Vandals, who know no more of the amenities of a bon-vivant existence than a Hottentot can know of the bouquet of champagne. "There's philosophy," says Father Tom in the drama, "even in a jug of punch." We claim the credit of philosophy preaching by example, then, to no ordinary extent in the composition of this volume, for our index exhibits the title of eighty-six different kinds of punches, together with a universe of cobblers, juleps, bitters, cups, slings, shrubs, etc., each and all of which the reader is carefully educated how to concoct in the choicest manner. For the perfection of this education the name, alone, of Jerry Thomas is a sufficient guarantee. He has travelled Europe and America in search of all that is recondite in this branch of the spirit art. He has been the Jupiter Olympus of the bar at the Metropolitan Hotel in this city. He was the presiding deity at the Planters' House, St. Louis. He has been the proprietor of one of the most recherché saloons in New Orleans as well as in New York. His very name is synonymous in the lexicon of mixed drinks with all that is rare and original. And as he is as inexorable as the Medes and Persians in his principle that no excellent drink can be made out of anything but excellent materials, we conceive that we are safe in asserting that whatever may be prepared after his directions will be able to speak eloquently for itself. "Good wine needs no bush," Shakespeare tells us, and over one of Jerry's mixtures eulogy is quite as redundant.

So rapturously was "The Bon Vivant's Companion" acclaimed, and so phenomenal its success, that scores of imitations soon appeared, and the book-stalls of the nation groaned beneath the weight of volumes purporting to give directions for the concocting of all sorts of delectable beverages. But through all this excess of publishing Professor Thomas's work remained steadfastly first in the hearts of his countrymen, everywhere accepted as the production of a Great Master. Even to this day the real adept at manipulating a cocktail-shaker and other such utensils, one who approaches the act of compounding a drink in the proper humbleness of spirit, regards it somewhat as the Modernist regards the Scriptures: as perhaps a trifle out-moded by later discoveries, yet still worthy of all respect and reverence as the foundation of his creed and practice. The last edition of it was published in 1887, and was something to weep over, for not only had the elegant preface and the important contribution of Professor Schultz been omitted, but Professor Thomas's bursts of lyric writing had been subjected to the censorious scissors and the ravening blue pencil, and the title of the work had been changed from the roisteringly significant "Bon Vivant's Companion" to the vulgar and prosaic "Bartender's Guide, or, How to Mix All Kinds of Plain and Fancy Drinks." Worse, the elegant preface had given way to uninspiring "Hints to Bartenders." In this form the book lacked spirit; it was little more than a dull account of instructions to take a little of this and a little of that, shake them up and pour them down. I have been unable to find any record of how and when Professor Thomas passed to his reward, but I should not be surprised to learn that he expired of shock and horror with the final edition of his invaluable contribution to American science and culture in his hands. It is impossible to believe that he acquiesced in the editorial mutilations.

When Professor Thomas sat down to write "The Bon Vivant's Companion" and spray his nectarian delights upon a parched and thirsty world, he was very full of his subject—I speak figuratively—and his enthusiasm took the form of appending brief but appropriate comment to certain of his most beloved recipés. Thus, when he had set down the sum total of human knowledge concerning the preparation of that blood brother to the cocktail, the brandy crusta, one snifter of which would make a Prohibition agent of today burst into tears and tear up his bootlegging contracts, he added, "then smile." Again, when he had described a favorite beverage in great and glamorous detail, he concluded with the simple injunction, "Im-bibe!" Occasionally he soared into the more rarefied strata of literary endeavor and brought down a poem; it is to one of these inspired moments, when the mantle of Omar lay caressingly across his shoulders, that we are indebted for the proper method of preparing mulled wine, a not so mild beverage which in those simple and lawless days was usually consumed amid the tender intimacies of the home:

First, my dear Madam, you must take
Nine eggs, which carefully you'll break—
Into a bowl you'll drop the white,
The yolks into another by it.
Let Betsy beat the whites with switch,
Till they appear quite frothed and rich—
Another hand the yolks must beat
With sugar, which will make them sweet;
Three or four spoonfuls maybe will do,
Though some, perhaps, would take but two.
Into a skillet next you'll pour
A bottle of good wine, or more—
Put half a pint of water, too,
Or it may prove too strong for you;
And while the eggs (by two) are beating,
The wine and water may be heating;
But, when it comes to boiling heat,
The yolks and whites together beat
With half a pint of water more—
Mixing them well, then gently pour
Into the skillet with the wine,
And stir it briskly all the time.
Then pour it off into a pitcher;
Grate nutmeg in to make it richer.
Then drink it hot, for he's a fool,
Who lets such precious liquor cool.

III

The Dictionary of American Biography and other such standard works of reference, to their shame be it said, contain no accounts of Professor Thomas's life, and extensive research has failed to unearth any information about the period of his early youth. It seems fair to assume, however, that he did not attend Yale College or otherwise employ his time in dissipation, for at the age of twenty we find him a very eager but humble assistant to the Principal Bartender of a New Haven saloon, where he soon attracted favorable attention by his indefatigable quest of knowledge and lush inventiveness. He remained in New Haven for two years, constantly adding to his store of wisdom, and conducting a series of experiments by which he definitely disproved the theory, then widely held, and in recent years revived, that the alcoholic capacity of the American college boy was (and is) unlimited. In 1847, having exhausted New Haven as well as a majority of the Yale lads, he decided to seek harder subjects for his tests, and so shipped before the mast and sailed out of New York aboard the bark Annie Smith. The skipper of the Annie Smith was a notorious martinet, but he served excellent grog, and Professor Thomas hoped that with this as a basis he might invent something which would relieve the sailor's life of much of its hardship. The plight of the seaman had always saddened him.

The Annie Smith docked at San Francisco in the early Fall of 1849, after an eventful voyage around Cape Horn, and Professor Thomas left the vessel without the formality of saying good-bye to the skipper, for that verjuiced person had failed to recognize genius even when it was constantly under foot, and had looked with vigorous disapproval upon all his attempts to improve the grog and drinking habits of the crew. The Professor wisely remained in seclusion until the Annie Smith had sailed on her return voyage, and then became first assistant to the Principal Bartender of the El Dorado saloon, a famous resort of early San Francisco. There he continued his researches, and found excellent laboratory animals in the booted, bewhiskered, red-shirted, artillery-laden miners who flocked into the Dorado eager to exchange their new-found wealth for the products of the bartender's genius. For these gentlemen, rough of exterior but sound drinkers, Professor Thomas prepared the simple beverages of the period, but on occasion he also compounded novel mixtures which crashed through their systems and shook them loose from their boots, or at any rate from their gold dust. It is related that once, when a party of desperadoes swarmed into the El Dorado intent upon robbery, he suavely suggested that they refresh themselves before proceeding with their nefarious enterprise. They assented, whereupon he prepared a dram which stretched them quivering and helpless upon the floor. The Vigilantes then hanged them with considerable ceremony.

Professor Thomas refused to divulge the composition of the potion with which he had laid the bandits low, insisting that it had neither commercial value nor artistic merit, and that he would never again mix it unless confronted by a similar emergency. So far as can be ascertained he died with the secret locked in his heart. But the undoing of the robbers had not exhausted his powers of invention, as the customers of the El Dorado learned a few days later, when there came into the saloon a giant laden with gold dust and with three layers of pistols strapped about his equator. He had been many months in the mines and was fit to be tied; he yearned for adventure, and loudly proclaimed that whiskey was a beverage for nursing infants, and that the only way a distillery could get him would be to fall upon him.

"Barkeep!" he roared. "Fix me up some hell-fire that'll shake me right down to my gizzard!"

Professor Thomas surveyed him calmly and shrewdly estimated his capacity, which was obviously abnormal. He realized that here, at last, was a man worthy of his genius.

"Come back in an hour," he said. "I shall have something for you then."

The giant stamped out of the saloon, and Professor Thomas retired to the back room. His reputation, he realized, was at stake; if he did not produce something which would take the roar out of that colossus, all would be lost, even honor. So he grappled with the problem, and within an hour emerged, his brow wrinkled by furrows from the violence of his effort, but with a magnificent idea sizzling and crackling in his brain. A deep silence fell upon the crowded barroom as the Professor, looking neither to the right nor to the left, moved slowly into position behind the bar, and with great care took from their places in a special rack two silver mugs, with handles. These were the show utensils of the El Dorado, for they had been imported from New York at great expense, and the mere fact that they were being handled was sufficient to indicate that something of importance impended. Carefully setting the mugs upon the bar, Professor Thomas twirled his great mustache and turned to his audience.

"Gentlemen!" he announced, impressively, "you are about to witness the birth of a new beverage!"

A sigh of anticipation arose from the assemblage, and with one accord the mass of men moved forward, respectfully, until they stood five deep before the bar, with the giant, still booted, in the front rank. Professor Thomas smiled, and quietly poured a tumbler full of Scotch whiskey into one of the mugs, following it with a slightly smaller quantity of boiling water. Then, with an evil-smelling sulphur match of the period, he ignited the liquid, and as the blue flame shot toward the ceiling and the crowd shrank back in awe, he hurled the blazing mixture back and forth between the two mugs, with a rapidity and a dexterity that were well nigh unbelievable. This amazing spectacle continued in full movement for perhaps ten seconds, and then Professor Thomas quickly poured the beverage into a tumbler and smothered the flame. He stirred a teaspoonful of pulverized white sugar into the mixture, added a twist of lemon peel, and shoved the smoking concoction across the bar to the booted and bewhiskered giant.

"Sir!" said Professor Thomas, bowing. "The blue blazer!"

The boastful miner threw his head back and flung the boiling drink down his throat. He stood motionless for a moment, smacking his lips and tasting the full flavor of it, and then a startled and even horrified expression spread over his face. He swayed like a reed in the wind. He shivered from head to foot. His teeth rattled. His mouth opened and closed, but he could say nothing. He sank slowly into a chair. He was no longer fit to be tied.

"He done it!" he whispered at last. "Right down to my gizzard! Yes, sir, right down to my gizzard! Yes, sir, right down to my gizzard!"

Finally, he staggered to his feet, flung a bag of gold dust upon the bar, and wandered unsteadily into the night; and thereafter drank no more for three days, for the effect of a blue blazer, prepared by an artist, is by no means ephemeral. "The blue blazer does not have a very euphonious or classic name," wrote Professor Thomas in "The Bon Vivant's Companion", "but it tastes better to the palate than it sounds to the ear. A beholder gazing for the first time upon an experienced artist compounding this beverage, would naturally come to the conclusion that it was a nectar for Pluto rather than Bacchus. The novice in mixing this beverage should be careful not to scald himself. To become proficient in throwing the liquid from one mug to the other, it will be necessary to practice for some time with cold water."

IV

The blue blazer soon became the most popular Winter beverage on the Pacific Coast, but the strain of constantly preparing it so wearied Professor Thomas that within a few months he concluded to retire from the practice of his art for a short period of recuperation. He therefore resigned his position as first assistant to the Principal Bartender of the El Dorado, and betook himself to the Yuba River gold-fields, near Donaville, where he staked out a claim and busied himself with the prosaic occupation of digging gold. But after a week he could no longer stand supinely by and witness the monstrous indignities which the unskilled bartenders of Donaville perpetrated nightly upon helpless liquors, and so he returned to his life work, tending bar in the saloon owned by Claycraft & Cheever. During the daylight hours, however, he continued to work his mine, and by the following Spring had amassed a fortune of some $16,000 in gold dust. And having by that time educated the Donaville bartenders in good mixing habits, he cast for other cultural benefits that he might confer upon the booted and bewhiskered miners.

After a careful survey of the field, he decided that the principal need of the goldfields was refined amusement. It is true that the mining camps fairly swarmed with drinking places, and dance-halls staffed by hussies in short skirts, but Professor Thomas judged that such entertainment as they provided was neither refined nor educational; he was especially pained by the drinking habits of the hussies and their admirers, who generally took their liquor straight and thereafter abandoned themselves to disgraceful antics. To remedy this situation, he organized a minstrel band, with which he toured the gold country throughout the Summer. Ned Beach and Tom King were the end men, while the troupe also included Billy Wallace, Dan Coombs and Charley Stevens, all very famous singers and blackface comedians. The show prospered, but when Winter came Professor Thomas suddenly abandoned the enterprise and sailed for Central America. The reason for his departure remained a mystery until a miner, another bewhiskered giant, boasted that he had asked Professor Thomas to prepare a certain beverage, and that the Professor was obliged to hang his head and admit that he had never heard of it. The giant explained that the drink was peculiar to Central America.

Within a few months Professor Thomas had stocked his mental reservoir with the wisdom of the Central Americans, and then took ship to New York. There he learned that the Yale boys were again strutting boastfully about New Haven with no bartender to guide them. He immediately answered the call of duty and hastened to his home town, where he opened a new barroom, introduced the blue blazer, and soon put the Yale lads in their proper places. His task completed, he disposed of his New Haven holdings and journeyed to South Carolina to study the julep in its native haunt. When he had added this noble concoction to his repertoire he went to Chicago, and for several months eked out a lonely existence in that outpost of civilization, which had not then been subjected to the civilizing influences of machine guns. From Chicago he dropped down to St. Louis, where he became Principal Bartender at the Planters' House, one of the most famous hotels in America, especially noted for its fried chicken and wallles, its catfish and candied sweet potatoes. It was while he was presiding over the Planters' House bar, in the early fifties, that Professor Thomas reached the apex of his career by inventing a beverage which he first called the Copenhagen, and then the Jerry Thomas, but which has thundered down the years as the Tom and Jerry. I give herewith his original recipe for this prince of cold weather drinks. It should be prepared in a punch bowl, or other large container:

Five pounds of sugar.

One dozen eggs.

Half a small glass of Jamaica rum.

One and one-half teaspoonsful of ground cinnamon.

Half a teaspoonful of ground cloves

Half a teaspoonful of ground allspice.

Beat the white of the eggs to a stiff froth, and the yolks until they are as thin as water, and mix together and add the spice and rum, and thicken with sugar until the mixture attains the consistency of a light batter.

Take a small bar glass, and to one teaspoonful of the above mixture, add one wine glass of brandy, and fill the glass with boiling water; grate a little nutmeg on top. Adepts at the bar, in serving the Tom and Jerry, sometimes adopt a mixture of one-half brandy, one-fourth Jamaica rum and one-fourth Santa Cruz rum, instead of brandy plain. This compound is usually mixed and kept in a bottle, and a wine glass is used to each tumbler of Tom and Jerry.

A teaspoonful of cream of tartar, or about as much carbonate of soda as you can get on a dime, will prevent the sugar from settling to the bottom of the mixture.

With the invention of the Tom and Jerry and the introduction of the blue blazer into the Missouri metropolis, Professor Thomas concluded—though mistakenly—that he had civilized St. Louis and taken the curse off the hard mid-Western Winter. So he surrendered his post as Principal Bartender at the Planters' House, and amid the wailing of the citizenry embarked upon a flat-bottomed stern-wheeler which, in time, landed him at New Orleans. There he dipped into his money bags and opened a barroom which the preface to his literary work describes as a very recherché establishment. But he soon became discouraged, for his heart was in the preparation of cold weather beverages, and there was scant demand in Louisiana for the blue blazer and the Tom and Jerry. So he sold his New Orleans holdings and returned to New York, where he was immediately engaged as Principal Bartender of the Metropolitan Hotel, then under the management of William M. Tweed and a center of the city's night life, which in those days was quite abundant. Professor Thomas celebrated his return to the chilly North by mixing a huge punch bowl of Tom and Jerry, which was given away free to all customers for a week, and by introducing several fine Southern mixtures to the jaded palates of the principal men of Gotham. Chief among them was the crusta, a beverage of rare merit, first compounded by Santani, owner of a celebrated Spanish café in New Orleans. In "The Bon Vivant's Companion" Professor Thomas gave the following instructions for preparing the brandy crusta, head of the family:

Three or four dashes of gum syrup.
One dash of Boker's bitters.
One wine glass of brandy.
Two dashes of Curaçao.
One dash of lemon juice.

First, mix the ingredients in a small tumbler, then take a fancy red wine-glass, rub a sliced lemon around the rim of the same and dip it into pulverized sugar, so that the sugar will adhere to the edge of the glass. Pare half a lemon the same as you would an apple (all in one piece), so that the paring will fit into the wine glass. After shaking up the crusta with ice, strain it into the wine-glass from the tumbler. Then smile.

V

When Professor Thomas began his experiments with the cocktail, this splendid concoction, whose name is now daily taken in vain by thousands of weird mixtures in thousands of American homes, was then the puling infant of the great family of beverages, and had few friends and practically no admirers. "The cocktail," wrote Professor Thomas, "is a modern invention and is generally used on fishing and other sporting parties, although some patients insist that it is good in the morning as a tonic." Indeed, at this period it was not only a morning drink, an eye-opener, but was seldom served over the bar; as Professor Thomas indicates, it was generally bottled and sold for trips into the country and other expeditions. In the course of time it became more popular, but as late as 1879 it had not become the standard before-dinner drink that it was in later years, and as it is now throughout this great land. "In the morning," said a paper called Under the Gaslight, in 1879, "the merchant, the lawyer, or the Methodist deacon takes his cocktail. Suppose it is not properly compounded? The whole day's proceedings go crooked because the man himself feels wrong from the effects of an unskillfully mixed drink."

After much research, Professor Thomas concluded that the lowly estate of the cocktail was in part due to the faulty bitters employed in its composition. He therefore busied himself in his laboratory, and in due time appeared with Jerry Thomas's Own Bitters, prepared according to the following formula:

One-fourth pound of raisins, two ounces of cinnamon, one ounce of snake root, one lemon and one orange cut in slices, one ounce of cloves, and one ounce of allspice. Put the mixture in a good sized bottle and fill with Santa Cruz rum.

This discovery was made soon after Professor Thomas opened the first of his New York barrooms at Broadway and Washington Place, and during the next few years cocktail drinking increased so greatly that the beverage became the favorite morning tippie of all men of convivial habit, and few self-respecting New York business men would attempt to begin a day's work without one. However, very few of the myriad of present day cocktails were known. The first edition of "The Bon Vivant's Companion" lists but ten different varieties—the bottle, the brandy, the fancy brandy, the whiskey, the champagne, the gin, the fancy gin, the Japanese, the soda, and the Jersey. They were all very simple mixtures, and with the exception of the last three are sufficiently described by their names. The Japanese cocktail was thus prepared by Professor Thomas:

One tablespoonful of orgeat syrup.
One half teaspoonful of Bogart's bitters.
One wine-glass of brandy.
One or two pieces of lemon peel.

The Jersey cocktail he composed of sugar, bitters and cider, while in the soda cocktail he substituted soda for the cider. Both were rather innocuous.

Professor Thomas's ballyhoo for the cocktail was carried on with great energy for almost a score of years, and the last edition of his masterpiece contains the formulæ for no fewer than twenty-four different kinds, including such favorites as the Manhattan, the Absinthe, and the Martini, which was originally called the Martinez. He also gave directions in that edition for preparing the morning glory, the Saratoga and the coffee cocktails, which were popular for many years, but are seldom heard of now. He made the morning glory thus:

Three dashes of gum syrup.
Two dashes of Curaçao.
Two dashes of Bogart's bitters.
One dash of absinthe.
One pony of brandy.
One pony of whiskey.
One piece of lemon peel, twisted to express the oil.
Two small pieces of ice.

Stir thoroughly and remove the ice. Fill the glass with seltzer water or plain soda, and stir with a teaspoon having a little sugar in it.

And thus the coffee cocktail:

One teaspoonful of powdered white sugar.
One fresh egg.
One large wine-glass of port wine.
One pony of brandy.
Break the egg into the glass, put in the sugar, and lastly the port wine. Shake up very thoroughly, and strain into a medium bar goblet. Grate a little nutmeg on top before serving.

"The name of this drink," wrote Professor Thomas with characteristic meticulousity, "is a misnomer, as coffee and bitters are not to be found among its ingredients. But it looks like coffee when it has been properly concocted, hence probably its name."

Professor Thomas, in his work, also described five very interesting drinks called the Bishop, the Protestant Bishop, the Archbishop, the Cardinal and the Pope. Thus he made a Bishop: "Stick an orange full of cloves and roast it before a fire. When brown enough, cut it into quarters, and pour over it a quart of hot port wine, add sugar to taste, and let the mixture simmer for half an hour." To make an Archbishop, he substituted claret for port; to make a Cardinal, he substituted champagne for claret, and to make a Pope he substituted Burgundy for champagne. He prepared a Protestant Bishop thus: "Mix four tablespoons of white sugar, two tumblers of water, one lemon in slices, one bottle of claret, four tablespoons of Santa Cruz rum or Jamaica rum, and ice." All of these beverages were described in the first edition of "The Bon Vivant's Companion," but in the last edition the Archbishop, the Cardinal and the Pope were omitted because of protests from the Protestant denominations, which complained that the proportion of four Catholic drinks to one Protestant was unfair.

VI

Professor Thomas left the Metropolitan in 1859 to brave the dangers of a trans-Atlantic voyage, but he was both seasick and homesick, and in less than a year he was again in New York, and at Broadway and Washington Place opened the most ornate barroom in the metropolis. But within another twelve months the Wanderlust led him in a covered wagon to San Francisco, where he was Principal Bartender at the Occidental Hotel for almost two years. Then he joined a wagon train to Virginia City, Nevada, where he introduced sound drinking practices and amassed another small fortune in gold dust. In 1865 he returned to New York and roamed no more.

He opened a barroom at Broadway and Twenty-second street which became one of the most celebrated saloons in the history of the city, and was frequented by the best citizens. Thomas Nast was then a young man struggling to find his place in the field of art, and Professor Thomas graciously extended a helping hand to him by opening his back room to the first exhibition of Nast cartoons. A hundred drawings of prominent personages were displayed upon the walls, and Nast leaped into instant popularity. Later Ned Mullin, a brilliant but dissipated caricaturist, exhibited his work in Thomas's gallery.

After seven years of continuous success and popularity, he sold his property at Twenty-second street and opened another and equally elaborate place at 1239 Broadway, where he remained for eight years. He finally disposed of this establishment to John Morrissey, a noted sporting figure. Morrissey came to New York in the early fifties during Gotham's golden age of gambling, when more than 6,000 gaming places were in open operation on Manhattan Island. Of these some 3,000 were first class establishments catering to men of sound financial substance and furnished with an elegance unsurpassed in later years. A majority of these early houses were in Park Row, Park Place and lower Broadway, and in Barclay, Vesey and Liberty streets, which are now entirely given over to business. They included such celebrated resorts as those operated by Orlando Moore, Handsome Sam Suydam, Jack Wallis, John Colton and Pat Herne. Wallis was a Chinaman who had been a faro dealer for French José, but had won the business from his employer on the toss of a coin. Many of the best houses were owned or backed by Reuben Parsons, the gambling monarch of the period, who was widely known as the Great American Faro Banker. Morrissey's most noted place was in Broadway just north of Tenth street, not far from the present Grace Church. His house in Saratoga Springs, which he founded in 1867, later came under the ownership of Richard Canfield, probably the most famous gambler New York has ever produced. In all of these elegant establishments faro was the principal game, and for more than twenty years after the Civil War it occupied the place in the affections of American fanciers that bridge and poker hold today.

After John Morrissey had purchased the Broadway property Professor Thomas moved downtown and in August, 1875, opened Thomas's Exchange at No. 3 Barclay street, which soon became as popular as any of his other places. Morrissey operated the Broadway house as a pool-room for a year or so, when it again came into the hands of the Professor, and was remodeled as a theater. It opened with a minstrel show in which Lew Dockstader made his first hit as a comedian. Dockstader's brother Charley was also a member of the company, as were Tommy Turner, Billy Bryant, Frank Kent, and Charley White, then the dean of minstrelsy. It was soon after he opened his Barclay street bar that Professor Thomas began to form his notable collection of gourds, which soon crowded cartoons and caricatures out of his mind, and within a few months literally covered the walls of his back room.

In Barclay street, now largely devoted to the sale of religious images and literature, Professor Thomas spent the remainder of his professional career, surrounded by his gourds and warmed by the respect and admiration of all enlightened drinkers. He strove to the last to inculcate proper drinking habits in his clientèle, and during his later years, as is the fashion of decaying men, became just a bit finicky, particularly about the Tom and Jerry and the blue blazer. He insisted that they were intended for cold weather only, and refused to prepare a Tom and Jerry until the first snow fall. It is related that he once smashed a punch-bowl containing the mixture which he found in the bar of a business rival in early September. He was even more strict with the blue blazer, and would prepare it for no man until the thermometer had registered ten degrees or less above zero. Thus battling for classical standards in his chosen art, he passed away, mourned and honored. He remains the greatest bartender in American history.

A JURY CASE

BY SHERWOOD ANDERSON

THEY had a still up in the mountains. There were three of them. They were all tough.

What I mean is they were not men to fool with—at least two of them weren't.

First of all there was Harvey Groves. Old man Groves had come into this mountain country thirty years before, and had bought a lot of mountain land here.

He hadn't a cent and had only made a small payment on the land.

Right away he began to make moon whiskey. He was one of the kind that can make pretty fair whiskey out of anything. They make whiskey out of potatoes, buckwheat, rye, corn or whatever they can get—the ones who really know how. One of that kind from here was sent to prison. He made whiskey out of the prunes they served the prisoners for breakfast—anyway, he called it whiskey. Old man Groves used to sell his whiskey down at the lumber mills. There was a big cutting going on over on Briar Top mountain.

They brought the lumber down the mountain to a town called Lumberville.

Old Groves sold his whiskey to the lumberjacks, and the manager of the mill got sore. He had old Groves into his office and tried to tell him what was what.

Instead, old Groves told him something. The manager said he would turn old Groves up. What he meant was that he would send the Federal men up the mountains after him, and old Groves told the manager that if a Federal man showed up in his hills he would burn the lumber stacked high about the mills at Lumberville.

He said it and he meant it, and the mill manager knew he meant it.

The old man got away with that. He stayed up in his hills and raised a large family up there. Those at home were all boys. Everyone about here speaks of the Grove girls, but what became of them I've never heard. There are none here now.

Harvey Groves was a tall, rawboned young man with one eye. He lost the other one in a fight. He began drinking and raising the devil all over the hills when he was little more than a boy, and after the old man died of a cancer, and the old woman died and the land was divided among the sons and sold, and he got his share, he blew it in gambling and drinking.

He went moonshining when he was twenty-five. Cal Long and George Small went in with him. They all chipped in to buy the still.

Nowadays you can make moon whiskey in a small still—it's called "over night stuff"—about fourteen gallons to the run, and you make a run in one night.

You can sell it fast. There are plenty of men to buy and run it into the coal mining country over east of here. It's pretty raw stuff.

Cal Long, who went in with Harvey, is a big man with a beard. He is as strong as an ox. They don't make them any meaner. He seems a peaceful enough man, when he isn't drinking, but when he starts to drink, look out. He usually carries a long knife and he has cut several men pretty badly. He has been in jail three times.

The third man in the party was George Small. He used to come by our house—lived out our way for a time. He is a small nervous looking young man who worked, until last Summer, on the farm of old man Barclay. One day last Fall, when I was over on the Barclay road and was sitting under a bridge fishing, George came along the road.

What was the matter with him that time I've never found out.

I was sitting in silence under the bridge and he came along the road making queer movements with his hands. He was giving them a dry wash. His lips were moving. The road makes a turn right beyond the bridge, and I could see him coming for almost a half mile before he got to the bridge. I happened to be sitting under a bush and could see him without his seeing me. When he got close I heard his words. "O, my God, don't let me do it," he said. He kept saying it over and over. He had got married the Spring before. He might have had some trouble with his wife. I remember her as a small red-haired woman. I saw the pair together once. George was carrying their baby in his arms, and we stopped to talk. The woman moved a little away. She was shy as most mountain women are. George showed me the baby—not more than two weeks old—and it had a wrinkled little old face. It looked ages older than the father and mother, but George was fairly bursting with pride while I stood looking at it.

How he happened to go in with men like Harvey Groves and Cal Long is a wonder to me, and why they wanted him is another wonder.

I had always thought of George as a country neurotic—the kind you so often see in cities. He always seemed to me out of place among the men of these hills.

He might have fallen under the influence of Cal Long. A man like Cal likes to bully people physically. Cal liked to bully them spiritually too.

Luther Ford told me a tale about Cal and George. He said that one night in the Winter Cal went to George Small's house—it is a tumble-down little shack up in the hills—and called George out. The two men went off together to town and got drunk. They came back about two o'clock in the morning, and stood in the road before George's house. I have already told you something about the wife. Luther said that at that time she was sick. She was going to have another baby. A neighbor had told Luther Ford. It was a queer performance, one of the kind of things that happen in the country and that gives you the creeps.

He said the two men stood in the road before the house cursing the sick woman inside.

Little nervous George Small walking up and down the road in the snow cursing his wife—Cal Long egging him on. George strutting like a little rooster. It must have been a sight to see and to make you a little sick seeing. Luther Ford said just hearing about it gave him a queer feeling in the pit of his stomach.

II

And this Spring early these three men went in together, making whiskey.

Between Cal and Harvey Groves it was a case of dog eat dog. They had bought the still together, each putting in a third of its cost, and then, one night after they had made and sold two runs, Harvey stole the still from the other two.

Of course, Cal set out to get him for that.

There wasn't any law he and George Small could evoke—or whatever it is you do with a law when you use it to get some man.

It took Cal a week to find out where Harvey had hidden, and was operating the still, and then he went to find George.

He wanted to get Harvey, but he wanted to get the still, too.

He went to George Small's house and tramped in. George was sitting there, and when he saw Cal, was frightened stiff. His wife, thinner than ever since her second child was born and half sick, was lying on a bed. In these little mountain cabins there is often but one room, and they cook, eat and sleep in it—often a big family.

When she saw Cal, George's wife began to cry and, very likely, George wanted to cry too.

Cal sat down in a chair and took a bottle out of his pocket. George's wife says he had been drinking. He gave George a drink, staring at him hard when he offered it, and George had to take it.

George took four or five stiff drinks, not looking again at Cal or at his wife, who lay on the bed moaning and crying, and Cal never said a word.

Then suddenly George jumped up—his hands not doing the dry wash now—and began swearing at his wife.

"You keep quiet, damn you!" he yelled.

Then he did an odd thing. There were only two chairs in the cabin, and Cal Long had been sitting on one and George on the other. When Cal got up George took the chairs, one at a time, and going outside smashed them to splinters against a corner of the cabin.

Cal Long laughed at that. Then he told George to get his shotgun.

George did get it. It was hanging on a hook in the house and was loaded, I presume, and the two went away together into the woods.

Harvey Groves had got bold. He must have thought he had Cal Long bluffed. That's the weakness of these tough men. They never think anyone else is as tough as themselves.

Harvey had set the still up in a tiny, half broken down old house on what had once been his father's land, and was making a daylight run.

He had two guns up there but never got a chance to use either of them.

Cal and George must have just crept up pretty close to the house in the long grass and weeds.

They got up close, George with the gun in his hands, and then Harvey came to the door of the house. He may have heard them. Some of these mountain men, who have been law breakers since they were small boys, have sharp ears and eyes.

There must have been a terrific moment. I've talked with Luther Ford and several others about it. We are all, of course, sorry for George.

Luther who is something of a dramatist likes to describe the scene. His version is, to be sure, all a matter of fancy. When he tells the story he kneels in the grass with a stick in his hand. He begins to tremble, and the end of the stick wobbles about. He has taken a distant tree for the figure of Harvey Groves, now dead. When he tells of the scene in that way, all of us standing about and, in spite of the ridiculous figures Luther cuts, a little breathless, he goes on for perhaps five seconds, wobbling the stick about, apparently utterly helpless and frightened, and then his figure suddenly seems to stiffen and harden.

Luther could do it better if he wasn't built as he is—long and loose-jointed, whereas George Small, whose part in the tragedy he is playing, is small, and, as I have said, nervous and rather jerky.

But Luther does that, saying, in a low voice to us others standing and looking, "Now Cal Long has touched me on the shoulder."

The idea, you understand, is that the two men crept up to the lonely little mountain house in the late afternoon, George Small creeping ahead with the heavily loaded shotgun in his hands, really being driven forward by Cal Long, creeping at his heels, a man, Luther explains, simply too strong for him, and that, at the fatal moment, when they faced Harvey Groves, and I presume had to shoot or be shot, and George weakened, Cal Long just touched George on the shoulder.

The touch, you see, according to Luther's notion, was a command.

It said, "Shoot!", and George's body stiffened, and he shot.

He shot straight, too.

There was a piece of sheet-iron lying by the door of the house. What it was doing there I don't know. It may have been some part of the stolen still. In the fraction of a second that Harvey Groves had to live he snatched it up and tried to hold it up before his body.

The shot tore right through the metal and through Harvey Groves' head and through a board back of his head. The gun may not have been loaded when George Small brought it from his house. Cal Long may have loaded it.

Anyway Harvey Groves is dead. He died, Luther says, like a rat, in a hole—just pitched forward and flopped around a little and died. How a rat in a hole, when he dies, can do much flopping around I don't know.

After the killing, of course, Cal and George ran, but before they did any running Cal took the gun out of George Small's hands and threw it in the grass.

That, Luther says, was to show just whose gun did the killing.

III

They ran, and, of course, they hid themselves.

There wasn't any special hurry. They had shot Harvey Groves in that lonely place and he might not have been found for days but that George Small's wife, being sick and nervous, just as he is, ran down into town, after Cal and George had left their place, and went around to the stores crying and wringing her hands like a little fool, telling everyone that her husband and Cal Long were going to kill someone.

Of course, that stirred everyone up.

There must have been people in town who knew that Cal and George and Harvey had been in together and what they had been up to.

They found the body the next morning—the shooting had happened about four in the afternoon—and they got George Small that next afternoon.

Cal Long had stayed with him until he got tired of it, and then had left him to shift for himself. They haven't got Cal yet.

A lot of people think they never will get that one. "He's too smart," Luther says.

They got George sitting beside a road over on the other side of the mountains. He says Cal Long stopped an automobile driving past, a Ford, stopped the driver with a gun he had in his pocket all the time.

They haven't even found the man who drove the Ford. It may be he was someone who knows Cal and is afraid.

Anyway, they have got George Small in jail over at the county seat, and he tells everyone he did the killing, and sits and moans and rubs his funny little hands together and keeps saying over and over, "God, don't let me do it," just as he did that day when he crossed the bridge, long before he had got into this trouble, and I was under the bridge fishing and saw and heard him. I presume they'll hang him, or electrocute him—whichever it is they do in this State—when the time comes.

And his wife is down with a high fever, and, Luther says, has gone clear off her nut.

But Luther, who acts the whole thing out so dramatically whenever he can get an audience, and who is something of a prophet, says that if they have to get a jury from this county to try George Small, and even though the evidence is all against him, he thinks the jury will just go it blind and bring in a verdict of not guilty.

He says, anyway, that is what he would do, and others, who see him acting the thing out and who know Cal Long and Harvey Groves and George Small better than I do, having lived longer in this county and having known them all since they were boys, say the same thing.

It may be true. As for myself—being what I am, hearing and seeing all this—

How do I know what I think?

It's a matter, of course, the jury will have to decide.

THE PACING WHITE MUSTANG

BY J. FRANK DOBIE

A MAN on foot is no man at all. The proverb belonged to the West when the West was a land of two radical facts: horses and horsemen. The retreating Indians, the advancing cavalymen, the pony expressmen bridging two thousand miles of continent in ten days, the cowboys overspreading an empire, the mustangers, scouts, hunters, traders, trappers, outlaws, sheriffs, rangers, plainsmen, mountain men, and brush poppers—all went mounted. Their mobility, their lives, the power for which they lusted depended on their horses.

Whatever men most need, most desire, they talk about and idealize. In those far days when "on foot" meant simply "without a horse" and when a man on foot was no man at all, circumstances forced the horsemen to depend upon their own talk for amusement. The chuck-line rider who could tell a good story was lord of every dugout he visited. Thus, with horses the inevitable theme and with yarn spinning a camp-fire necessity, there arose in the Old West the most magnificent legend of which horse has been the subject since Pegasus and Bucephalus—the legend of the Pacing White Mustang of the Prairies. It germinated, fruited and withered, almost within the compass of one generation. It is—it was—the last of the great horse legends of the civilized world. Before it can be understood, however, some of the facts out of which it grew must be recited.

As soon as Cortez landed in Mexico, he realized the power that the horse gave him, both physically and psychologically, over the natives. That was in 1519, and for twenty-five years a royal edict prohibiting Indians from riding horses was enforced by the Spaniards. But the necessity of forming alliances and training allies to the usages of European warfare forced a suspension of it. Moreover, a few mares and stallions escaped into the wilds, and others were stolen. By the end of the century savage bands mounted on horses were roaming along the Rio Grande. Seventy-five years later the Pawnees and Dakotas and other tribes of the Missouri plains had come to regard horses as necessities. By the middle of the Eighteenth Century Indians in Central Canada were using them, and from the Sierra Madres of Mexico to the prairies of Alberta the wild offspring of Spanish stock—the mustangs—were running loose wherever the buffalo drifted or the antelope grazed. There must have been more than a million of them. In the Texas Panhandle, between the Palo Duro and the Salt Fork of the Brazos alone, the plainsmen who took over that country in 1877 estimated that there were 50,000 head.

The effect that the advent of the horse had on the Plains Indian can only be guessed at or deduced by analogy. Yet beyond all doubt the change from foot to horse was as revolutionary to them as the change from ox cart to automobile has been to the white men who now possess their territory. The horse became to the Plains Indians the chief symbol of power and wealth. In 1823 Thomas James saw a band of Comanches on the North Canadian capture and tame in a few hours' time more than a hundred mustangs. They told him that at their home camp on Red river they had 16,000 horses. The Crows on the Yellowstone, over which Jim Beckwourth ten years later was chieftain, had still more. Old Jim was a great adventurer and a highly engaging liar, but there is no reason to discount his statement that a band of his warriors—headed by himself—raided a great Comanche camp south of the Arkansas river and cut out 5000 horses from a prairie filled with them. When, driving their booty before them, they got back to the Yellowstone, they found that another party of Crows had stolen 2700 horses from the Coutnees. Just before this some other Crow braves had taken 800 head away from the Cheyennes. Soon, in the unrelenting struggle for horses, Jim's people lost 3000 head to the Blackfeet, but they quickly retaliated with a raid that netted them 7000 Blackfeet horses.

Often the Plains Indians fought the pale-faces, not to protect their buffaloes and territory, but to possess the superior horses of their enemies. When, in 1874, Mackenzie on the Palo Duro killed only a few Indians out of a numerous band of Kiowas, Comanches and Arapahoes, but managed to capture and shoot 1400 head of their horses, he knew that he had them completely subjugated. So it was natural that while the far-flung tribes of the Plains performed their sacred rites of the buffalo, and told strange tales of that paragon of the species, the White Buffalo, they should also contribute their share to the legend of the White Mustang, the king of all the million untamed and unowned horses of the Western World.

By the time the Plains Indians reached their zenith as horsemen—roughly, in the first half of the last century—more than one Spanish rancher in California was running 20,000 head of horses on his range. The California breed was hardly superior to that of the Indians; nevertheless, when Frémont made his great ride of 840 miles in a little more than eight days, he rode one of these California cayuses 130 miles in twenty-four hours.

As soon as the Americans in any considerable numbers reached California, they began stealing the range horses. The sport was full of dash and hazard. Shortly after the outbreak of the Mexican War, Billy Williams, a man whom Kit Carson much admired and who was on fire with patriotism, aided by twenty-five or thirty mountain men, rounded up 1500 head of horses belonging to California Mexicans and set out with them for Santa Fé. A hastily raised posse of two hundred rancheros followed, and the Americans made such good time that they ran away from 1000 of the horses and mules in their stolen herd. Then, at a waterhole, Williams called a halt. Fifteen miles away the Californians halted also. For three days each of the two camps waited for the other to act. The night of the third day Williams attacked, and took every horse, mule, and burro his pursuers had. In high feather the raiders now moved on, but a week later Indians surprised them and drove off their entire caballada, leaving them to hoof it in to Santa Fé as best they could. When it was not convenient to steal the California horses, the Americans traded for them and drove thousands of them as far east as Missouri.

II

But the epic drive of range horses was from Texas. Immediately following the Civil War the far-famed Chisholm Trail became the highway of longhorn herds to the North. Before it and the other trails were fenced across and plowed under, the cowboys had trailed 10,000,000 Texas cattle and 1,000,000 Texas horses over them. The horses were superior in breed to the mustangs, but they were essentially Spanish—tough, wiry, thoroughly adapted to their environment. Wherever ponies with bottom were required the Texas ponies were in demand. Their chief use was in developing the ranch industry over Nebraska, the Dakotas, Wyoming, Montana, Nevada, Idaho—all the vast territory that by the close of the seventies had been finally wrested from the Indians.

Many may ask why, with hordes of unclaimed mustangs roaming along the trails and over the ranges, any man should have had to buy or steal horses. But let it be remembered that cattle were never cheap because buffalo and antelope were plentiful. Mustangs were hard to catch and once caught they were harder to tame. Only with great difficulty could they be domesticated upon the open range. Many frontiersmen never tried to handle anything but the colts. Still, thousands and tens of thousands of grown mustangs were culled from the unnumbered caballadas and broken on the spot or driven off. The mustangers formed a class peculiar to themselves. One of them, through song and story, became a kind of immortal, known wherever men yarned of buckskins:

There was a gallant Texian,
They called him Mustang Grey;
When quite a youth he left his home,
Went ranging far away.

He ne'er would sleep within a tent,
No comforts would he know;
But like a brave old Texian
A-ranging he would go.

These mustangers caught colts and raised them on bottles. They snared mustangs, "creased" them, "walked" them down, ran them down, roped them, penned them, cornered them in box canyons, starved them away from water—in a score of ways captured them. Then, as land increased in value and was fenced, and horses of all kinds became less valuable, the mustangers were hired to shoot wild horses and so rid the new pastures of them, as if they were beasts of prey. Indeed, they were beasts of prey, for they not only devoured a great deal of valuable grass, but enticed away and "spoiled" hundreds of ranch horses.

Even if the mustangs could have been captured easily and tamed, the average of them was so inferior that they were in little demand. The average, I say. The term mustang, it must be clearly understood, included many kinds of horses. The flowing tail, the tossing mane, the arched neck generally made their freedom-loving possessor appear, at a distance, to be a much better horse than he proved to be under the saddle. But there were notable exceptions. Along with scrub willow tails and lantern-jawed stallions ran beautifully proportioned fillies and magnificent potros. Not infrequently the leader of a caballada was some well-bred animal that had escaped from a ranch. The guarding stallion of many a manada (bunch of mares) appeared to the horsemen who glimpsed him to be superior to anything they had ever seen in the equine world.

Beautiful and strong and swift, these exceptions—like Atalanta, free to those who could outrun them—were the prizes of camp-fire dreams and the objects of great horse round-ups and races that more than once led to a mustang's leaping to his death rather than submit to capture. Every range had its own supreme mustang, but superb above all the local superiors was the immortal White Mustang of the Prairies. All the men who rode horses wanted him, talked of him, dreamed of him. By the time barbed wire and squatter sovereignty had antiquated the free range, he had come to be acclaimed and celebrated wherever mustangs were known.

This lordly and ubiquitous stallion of stallions went under many names: the Pacing White Stallion, the White Steed of the Prairies, the White Mustang, the White Sultan, the Ghost Horse of the Plains, the Phantom Wild Horse. But whatever his name, he answered to none. His fire, his grace, his beauty, his speed, his endurance, his intelligence were, of course, simply the merits that horsemen admired most in horses, but in him they were supernal, as was his passion for liberty. So wherever spurs clicked and camp-fires burned over the unfenced world that stretched from the prickly pear flats of South Texas to the bad lands of Montana the story of the Pacing White Stallion was told. Newspaper correspondents heard and repeated it; fiction makers elaborated it, and it was echoed in cities beyond the seas. A few old men yet recall snatches of it. From them and from scattered records I have tried to piece out the legend.

III

The earliest account of the supreme Mustang, so far as I know, is found in Washington Irving's "Tour on the Prairies." October 10, 1832, Irving set out from old Fort Gibson, in what is now Eastern Oklahoma, on his famous tour. Following up the north bank of the Arkansas, which he crossed a short distance above its junction with the Cimarron, he and his party proceeded in a westerly direction. At length they came into the range of the mustang, and in Irving's journal for October 21 are these words:

We had been disappointed this day in our hopes of meeting with buffalo, but the sight of the wild horse had been a great novelty, and gave a turn to the conversation of the camp for the evening. There were several anecdotes told of a famous grey horse, which has ranged the prairies of this neighborhood for six or seven years, setting at naught every attempt of the hunters to capture him. They say he can pace . . . faster than the fleetest horse can run.

On through the 1830's, out in Santa Fé and along the Santa Fé Trail, both of which he described surpassingly well in his "Commerce of the Prairies," printed in 1844, chatty Josiah Gregg heard "marvelous tales" of a "medium-sized stallion of perfect symmetry, milk-white, save a pair of black ears,—a natural pacer." This mustang, continued Gregg, "the trapper celebrates in the northern Rocky Mountains; the hunter on the Arkansas; while others have him pacing on the borders of Texas."

In 1841, nine years after Irving's tour, the Republic of Texas sent what is known as the Santa Fé Expedition to annex New Mexico. The picturesque and tragic fate of that expedition does not here concern us. Sharing in its fate was a brilliant newspaper correspondent from New Orleans, George W. Kendall, who wrote as he travelled a history of the expedition. In an attempt to cross the Staked Plains, the Texans blundered almost as far north as Red river, and it was while they were in this region that Kendall heard stories of the Steed of the Prairies. His journals were originally published in the New Orleans Picayune in 1842; two years later they were incorporated in a book, "A Narrative of the Texan Santa Fé Expedition." Therein he said:

Many were the stories told by some of the old hunters of a large white horse that had often been seen in the vicinity of the Cross Timbers and near Red river. . . . As the camp stories ran, he has never been known to gallop or trot, but paces faster than any horse that has been sent out after him can run; and so game and untiring is the White Steed of the Prairies, for he is well known to trappers and hunters by that name, that he has tired down no less than three race-nags, sent expressly to catch him, with a Mexican rider well trained to the business of taking wild horses. . . .

"Some of the hunters," continued Kendall, "go so far as to say that the White Steed has been known to pace his mile in less than two minutes, and that he could keep up his pace until he had tired down everything in pursuit. Large sums have been offered for his capture, and the attempt has been frequently made. But he still roams his native prairies in freedom, solitary and alone." One old hunter asserted that the White Steed was too proud to associate with other mustangs. When Kendall got back to New Orleans from the prisons of Mexico, he heard that the Steed had been captured and had died—but that, it appears, was a report "greatly exaggerated."

Meantime, Captain Marryat in London had plagiarized the story and clapped it into his rambling "Narrative . . . of Monsieur Violet," and a New Orleans bard, one J. Barber, had put it into a spirited ballad:

Not the team of the Sun, as in fable portrayed,
Through the firmament rushing in glory arrayed,
Could match in wild majesty, beauty, and speed
That tireless, magnificent, snowy-white steed.

Let them bid for his freedom,—unbridled, unshod,
He will roam till he dies through these pastures of God.

Then, with the appearance of "Moby Dick," in 1851, the White Mustang burst with thundering hoof-beats out of the "pastures of God" into the ranges of literary immortality. In that great chapter on "The Whiteness of the Whale," wherein Melville reviews the white objects of earth, ranging from the snowy Andes to the sacred elephants of India, he reaches his climax with a panegyric on the White Mustang:

Most famous in our Western annals and Indian traditions is that of the White Steed of the Prairies; a magnificent milk-white charger, large-eyed, small-headed, bluff-chested, and with the dignity of a thousand monarchs in his lofty, over-scoring carriage. He was the elected Xerxes of vast herds of wild horses, whose pastures in those days were only fenced by the Rocky Mountains and the Alleghanies. At their flaming head he westward trooped it like the chosen star which each evening leads on the hosts of light. The flashing cascade of his mane, the curving comet of his tail, invested him with housings more resplendent than gold and silver-beaters could have furnished him. A most imperial and archangelical apparition of that unfallen, western world, which to the eyes of the old trappers and hunters revived the glories of . . . primeval times. . . . Whether marching amid his aides and marshals in the van of countless cohorts that endlessly streamed it over the plain, like an Ohio; or whether with his subjects browsing all around at the horizon, the White Steed gallopingly reviewed them with warm nostrils reddening through his cool milkiness; in whatever aspect he presented himself, always to the bravest Indians he was the object of trembling reverence and awe.

It would be hard to say where Melville got his information, but there is no doubt as to where the once widely read Mayne Reid got his. He knew better, although his story came ten years after "Moby Dick," than to speak of the Pacing Stallion as belonging to the past. When Reid landed at New Orleans, fresh from Ireland, he was just a boy. He became a trader over the Red river country. His companions were French trappers, American plainsmen, Indian warriors, legend-telling medicine men. Later he enlisted in the war against Mexico and was wounded at the battle of Chapultepec. For a while after the war he was stationed at Fort Inge near the Rio Grande. Meantime he had become an author fond of weaving into his romances local traditions, such as that of the Headless Horseman of the Nueces and that of the Mountain of Gold.

The scene of "The War Trail, or, The Hunt of the Wild Horse" (1861) is laid between the Nueces river and the Rio Grande, whither from the plateaus of the north the mighty mustang had drifted. "I had heard of the White Steed of the Prairies," writes Reid. "What hunter or trapper, trader or traveller, throughout all the wild borders of prairie-land has not? . . . For nearly a century has he figured in the legends of the prairie 'mariner,' a counterpart of the Flying Dutchman. . . . Some say that he cannot be taken, that he is so fleet as to glide out of sight in a glance on the open prairie. There are those who assert that he is a phantom, un demonio!"

IV

If this were the study of a literary tradition rather than of a people's tradition, there would be other fictionists to examine: Captain J. W. French, Lieutenant R. H. Jayne, Ernest Seton-Thompson (far superior to the other members of the company that he is here grouped with), Henry Herbert Knibbs, and Zane Grey. But the White Mustang paces through the pages of most of these gentlemen like a hobby horse sired in a fiction livery stable rather than like the lordly creature familiar to plainsmen who habitually slept on Tucson beds and frequently had to live on Spanish dinners: that is, slept on their bellies and covered themselves with their backs, and when they were hungry got down and drew up their belts a notch.

One such frontiersman, Curley Hatcher of Myrtle Point, Oregon, still lives. Here is his testimony:

While I was catching wild horses on the Kansas and Colorado line in 1868 I saw the famous mustang very often. He never ranged with other mustangs but always alone. When I first saw him he was a beautiful grey with long mane and tail, and many a time I ran him in an attempt to rope him. Always I rode the best and fastest horses I could get, but I never rode one that could run fast enough to make the great mustang break his pace. Like hundreds of other frontiersmen, I was interested in this noble animal, and after I quit trying to capture him I kinder kept up with his history. I heard of him drifting south gradually, through No Man's Land and New Mexico and then below the Staked Plains. In 1874 I laid eyes on him again.

I was a Texas ranger carrying dispatches from Coleman county to Menard on the San Saba river, when I came upon him about twenty miles east of my destination. He was then snow white, but I recognized him immediately as the grey horse I had chased over Colorado and Kansas six years before. I took after him, but in no time I was too far behind to even see his dust. I resolved then to organize a hunt to capture him. I would have given all I possessed to own him. Well, the next day when I came back over the same trail I found him again—dead. A Mexican lion, or panther, had jumped on his back from a live oak tree near by, and bit him behind the head, breaking his neck. There were signs of a terrible struggle, but the lion had not mutilated his frame. I examined him all over and I found every muscle and limb perfect in form. I clipped his mane and tail and as soon as I got back to camp made a hair rope out of them. This I kept for years as a souvenir of the greatest mustang ever seen in the world.

Sandy Morris, a sheep herder of Lucille, New Mexico, noted all over the Southwest for his ability to sing cowboy songs, has testimony to give also. Says he:

Along about 1875 I was riding down a road in the Llano river country when I spied a newspaper on the ground half covered by the sand. Of course I got down and picked it up. I don't know where it came from and I never paid any attention as to where it had been printed, but I can never forget the story it told of a snow-white mustang stallion. It seems that some time before this the stallion had been ranging in the vicinity of a fort, when one day a soldier saw him right up against the corral fence. He went outside afoot—just like a fool soldier—to investigate. The stallion made a dash at him, caught him by the back of the neck, and killed him. After this the soldiers and cowboys of the country organized a big hunt to take him alive. Everybody knew about him. They had got on to his way of running, and they placed men in relays every five miles over a distance of eighty miles. Well, the White Mustang struck the expected course, all right, and he went through those eighty miles without breaking his pace, and not a man got close enough to him to rope at him! Then some damned soldier shot him dead. Men who knew his history—and some of them must have been of a superstitious turn of mind—said that he would show up on his old range the next day. Whether he did or not, I can't say.

This "superstitious turn of mind" appears very often in the legend of the White Mustang, probably owing to Indian influence. The Kiowas were sure that neither fire nor lead could injure him. A bullet might pass through his body, but it would leave him unharmed; a prairie fire might burn to death the mares and colts following him, but he would emerge from it unscathed. Not many of the hard-headed American frontiersmen could go to such lengths in telling of the White Steed, but they all dreaded him as well as desired him, for his winsome ways drew their stock horses after him, and gentle mares in his company became as wild as mustangs.

Yet, however he might entice after him the wives of other stallions and the property of men so honest that they would not brand a maverick, the White Mustang was not of a malevolent disposition. Only in the report that Sandy Morris read in that mysterious newspaper does he so appear, and in a poorly written yarn, called "Wild Jim, the Texas Cowboy and Saddle King," that a certain Captain French printed in Antioch, Ill., forty years ago. Here the Stallion appears as a man-killer. His captor, according to the story,—for in a most extraordinary manner he had been captured—trained him to allow no one else to approach him. He killed "at least half a dozen men," most of them horse thieves trying to cut his picket rope!

Always in the orthodox narrative the Pacing White Mustang is a generous, beneficent animal. A quite different horse, called the Black Devil—Washington Irving heard of him too—was the fighter, the slayer. Various yarns about him have come down, and the tales accusing the White Steed of manslaughter must be due to the faulty memories of men who confused him with the black murderer. One that illustrates the White Sultan's benignity and intelligence came to me a few years ago from the late J. O. Dyer of Galveston. He heard it fifty years back from an old woman who was among the German colonists who came to Texas in the forties.

As her story went, some of the freshly arrived German settlers were moving up the Guadalupe river. They travelled in wagons, single file. The family of the last wagon in line had a very gentle old mare that followed without rope or halter, every once in a while stopping to graze along the way. The wagon was heaped with freight and the mare carried two sacks of corn-meal securely packed on her back. One day some member of the family squeezed in the over-crowded wagon suggested that Gretchen, the liveliest of the little girls, be placed between the meal sacks. Little Gretchen liked to ride; she would be safe and comfortable on the old mare; accordingly she was secured between the cushions of meal.

Along in the afternoon the wagon bogged in a buffalo wallow and in the struggle a wheel gave away. Hours were consumed in putting the wagon to rights, and while the men worked the mare grazed out of sight down the grassy draw. Little Gretchen fell into a doze. When she awoke the lazy old mare was running at full speed after a curveting, splendid white stallion that kept looking back and neighing in anxious, coaxing tones. Gretchen tried to jump off, but she had been tied on so that she would not fall, and the knots in the rope were out of her reach. As she afterwards learned, her parents did not miss her until nearly sundown. She was lost to them all night, all the next day, and the following night. Then on the third day she rode into camp on the mare—and the story she told of her wanderings has passed into the Texas saga.

After they had raced many miles, she said, the White Stallion led the old mare into his own manada, and the mares nosing around the newcomer began to sniff the corn-meal on her back. Then they began to bite into it, nipping the fat little legs of Gretchen. She expected to be chewed up right there, but the Sultan of the Plains was as considerate and intelligent as he was gallant. He fought off the wild mares, chewed the ropes in two, grasped the neckband of Gretchen's dress in his teeth, and carried her to the security of some ceniza bushes. Tired from her ride, she then fell asleep again. Next morning not a horse was in sight. She thought that the men of the wagon train would surely find her, and with wisdom unusual for her years she waited for them instead of roaming around. She drank from a waterhole in a hollow near at hand, ate a few mesquite beans and agarita berries, and at dark lay down in the warm soft grass where she had spent the night preceding.

At daylight of the second day the old mare was standing over her. For a long while little Gretchen tried in vain to clamber up on the mare's back. Exhausted and helpless, she was about to sit down and cry when the White Sultan dashed out of the bushes, again seized her by the dress, and gently placed her on the mare. Then, without a backward look or whinny, he disappeared. The mare took the trail to the caravan and arrived without the corn-meal sacks but with little Gretchen all sound except for some scratches on her fat legs. When she was an old woman she used to show the scars of those scratches in proof of the veracity of her story.

The final contributor to the legend is J. L. Hill of Long Beach, Calif. He drove the Texas Trail all the way to Wyoming, skinned buffaloes, snared mustangs. He says:

Yes, I have heard many times of the Pacing White Mustang. When I first heard of him I was a clabber-lipped cowboy. That was back in the seventies and I was living in Bonham, Texas, just south of the Red river. Various riders of the country kept bringing in word as to how they had run across the band of mustangs led by the Pacing Stallion. At that time he was ranging between Fort Sill and the Washita river, in the old Indian Territory.

Now, Dick Bragg of Bonham kept race ponies that he would run against anything in Texas or the Territory for stakes as high as any man wanted to raise them. In the Fall of '79, after the roundups were over, an extensive party organized to capture the Stallion. With them they took the fastest of Dick Bragg's race stock as well as everything else in the country that could run. Dick Bragg himself was along, hoping to make his own the champion race-horse of the world. A number of reservation Indians were taken in on the hunt. Unfortunately, something kept me from going.

The boys found their Mustang all right. They laid all kinds of traps for him and tried all kinds of schemes to run him down or hem him in. But when he was crowded he would break off from his manada, they said, and pace away like the wind. According to their report, he was not pure white, but of a light cream color, with snow-white mane and tail. The Indians believed him to be supernatural and called him the Ghost Horse of the Prairies or the Winged Steed. When running at a distance he showed nothing but a fast-flying snow-white mane and snow-white tail that looked like wings skimming the ground. The boys who got nearest to him said that he had a piece of rawhide rope around his neck. They thought that he had been snared at some watering and that the experience had helped to make him what he was—the most alert and the wildest as well as the fleetest animal in Western America.

Mustang hunters kept after him and later I heard that he had changed his range from the Washita to the South Canadian. Such a change showed wonderful cunning, for the ordinary mustang when chased would keep circling within certain limits until he was finally closed in. Some of the mustangers made their boast that they would finally get the White Ghost of the Prairies even if they had to shoot him. Death from a rifle may have been his fate. I last heard of him in 1881.

From 1832, when Irving first heard of the great White Mustang—and at that date he had been tantalizing horsemen between the Arkansas and the Cimarron for “six or seven years”—until 1881 is a long time for any horse to live and hold his lordship! The legend represents a lost culture, a vanished class of men, a stage in the sweep of the frontier. It will not perish. Pegasus and Bucephalus have not died. And then there are the colts! The other day an ancient Comanche chief, “brother of the Wichita Mountains,” was asked why there were so many white-spotted ponies among the horses of his tribe. He replied very simply that they were all descended from the Pacing White Mustang.

THE ARTS AND SCIENCES

Music

PIANO TECHNIQUE IN THE LIGHT OF EXPERIMENT

BY OTTO ORTMANN

WHEN a Harold Bauer takes us on a delightful musical Spaziergang through the Schwarzwald of Schumann, or a Walter Gieseking paints the charming pastels of a Debussy and a Ravel, we lose ourselves, and rightly so, in the fragrance of the woods and among the colors of the tonal sunsets. But thereby we forget that the action of a piano remains, after all, nothing but a few wooden sticks, some glue, a bit of leather, and some felt. In thus forgetting, we fall into the sentimentality of assigning qualities and colors to the tones themselves, attributing to the inanimate sticks the power of transmitting directly the singing of the composer's soul and the yearning of the performer's heart. The result is—well, read the romantic rhapsodies of the so-called music critics, or sit through a piano lesson in which a spinster teacher pours out her more or less sublimated sex repression upon the E flat, or perhaps the F sharp Nocturne (poor Chopin!), or again, listen to the emotional outburst at a concert, where applause makes no distinction whatever between an allegro giocoso and an adagio patetico.

It has remained for experimental physics and psychology to replace this hodgepodge of mysticism with a bit of Kantian critique, thus writing, in strict accordance with good musical form, an exposition of fact before the free fantasy of fancy. This has been done by the relatively simple device of recording the actual movements of key, hammer, and string during piano playing, and thus preserving, for later study ad libitum, the fleeting muscular and tonal variations. The results, to say the least, are interesting and helpful. Interesting, because they reveal the purely physical components of many artistic effects, while pointing out to the lover of music how large a part of his enjoyment of the piano is a tonal illusion; and helpful, because they simplify many problems of the piano teacher: relaxation, arm- and hand-positions, tone-production, and even style. The results of this investigation, stripped of extraneous ornament, may be summarized in the statement that all the artistic effects secured on the piano, so far as they are auditory, are caused by mere variations in the intensity and duration of the tone, and in the noise-element—the percussive and friction noises of the action parts. There is nothing else. All the other tonal "qualities" are auditory illusions.

In support of this assertion I shall select a few examples at random from the data which a rather extensive study has furnished.¹ Let us take relaxation as the first example. In many works on piano-playing, such as those of Matthay and Caland, one reads again and again about the need for a relaxed arm. The reason given is that relaxed muscles produce a tone of a quality entirely different from that of a tone produced with rigid muscles. Well, let us see. In Figure 1 I record the actual path traversed by the hammer when it is moved by a relaxed arm and its path when the key is struck with the fist and a rigid arm. The time intervals at the top mark hundredths of seconds, and the horizontal displacement is thus a measure of hammer speed, and this, in turn, is a measure of tonal intensity. The difference, it is apparent, is one of loudness, not of quality, the rigid arm producing the louder tone. In view of the mechanics of the movement, it could not, of course, be otherwise, despite the fact that relaxation is often advocated as a cure for all tonal ills. What relaxation does is simply to moderate the intensity of rigidity, and to permit a better control of tonal intensity by reducing or eliminating the noises resulting from a percussive attack on the key. Do away with this percussiveness, and a perfectly rigid arm can produce exactly the same tone as that produced by a relaxed arm. As a matter of fact, in the coördinated movements of piano technique, relaxation is seldom present to any marked degree at the moment of tone production. Here muscular fixation is a mechanical necessity, and an apparatus sufficiently sensitive to record the muscular contraction will show that fixation. The value of relaxation is in its use before and immediately after tone-production.

¹Mr. Ortmann's complete materials are presented in "The Physical Basis of Piano Touch and Tone"; London and New York, 1925.

FIGURE 1.—The curve a shows the path made by a piano hammer when moved by a rigid arm; the curve b shows its path when moved by a relaxed arm.

Close upon the heels of relaxation, in the history of piano teaching, came the doctrine of weight-transfer: of rolling the arm-weight from key to key without withdrawal. Its advocacy was a reaction from the earlier schools of finger-action, the products of which still exist in abundance: players who practise scales with a coin on the back of the hand to insure quietness, or who play with a book under the arm to avoid lifting the humerus from the side of the body, or clamp their wrists through two holes in a board to eliminate wrist movement. The weight school, however, has gone to the opposite extreme, and its proponents speak of weight-transfer when the mechanics of the movement make this a sheer impossibility. In any technical figure involving rapid finger repetition the transfer of arm-weight is impossible, an observation that can be made on any suitably arranged dynamograph. And in many other figures the use of arm-weight seriously interferes with the speed and brilliance of the technique.

Again, one reads of the "sensitized fingertips breathing life and soul into the piano keys," but when the vibration of the string is actually recorded, one finds that it vibrates in exactly the same way when a lead weight falls upon the key. In Figure 2, the curve a shows the string-vibration produced by the touch of a very capable pianist, and b shows the same string vibrating after a lead weight is dropped upon the key. The two curves are identical.

FIGURE 2.—The upper curve shows the vibration of a piano string produced by the touch of a capable pianist, and the lower curve shows the vibration of the same string produced by letting a lead weight fall upon the key.

The layman, however, is not interested in these pedagogical problems. As listener, his interest centers in the tonal qualities themselves, such, for example, as those of De Pachmann, when, years ago, he played his Chopin, or those of Rachmaninoff to-day, when he transports adolescent girls into the seventh heaven of ecstasy with his playing of his inevitable C sharp minor Prelude. Teachers, players, and critics have invented an impressive and colorful array of terms to describe piano tone, among others: singing, dry, liquid, velvety, brittle, round, harsh, brassy, sympathetic, brilliant, surfacy, deep, full, mellow, shallow, ringing, shrill, metallic, clear, thin, limpid, steely, jarring, bell-like, woody, strident, thick, rasping, sour, crystal, sweet, warm, hollow, bitter, wavering, glassy.

I have recorded the movements of the piano key, hammer, and string for most of them, and the results show without exception that the imaged qualities are quantitative differences plus the admixture of the noise elements I have already mentioned. These intensity differences are then transferred to other sensory fields, and, linked with the fundamental pleasure-pain distribution common to all senses, there give rise to the qualities designated. One finds that the pleasurable qualities: full, round, warm, are tones of moderate intensity; that those mildly unpleasant: thin, surface, dry, are tones of weak intensity; and that those markedly unpleasant: brittle, brassy, strident, are tones of great intensity. The nature of this transfer into visual, kinesthetic, and gustatory fields is an interesting psychological phenomenon; it is based upon the limited range of reaction of any sense organ, as a result of which stimulation at the extremes is physiologically unpleasant, and that along the middle of the range of reaction, pleasant. When the intensity relationship is altered, the players making the records can no longer produce the desired tone-quality. A loud-surface tone, a weak-brilliant tone, a thin-full tone are physical and psychological impossibilities; just as impossible as a square circle, a tenor with an inferiority complex, or art senza alcohol.

But surely the individual differences in the styles of pianists are more than differences in tonal intensity and duration? They are not. If Mary Smith plays each tone of a Chopin nocturne at exactly the same intensity and duration at which Paderewski plays it (including the wrong notes), her performances will be identical with his. The fact that the music made by mechanical piano-players is not, at close range, accepted as the work of the original performers is the result, not of the absence of human elements that cannot be recorded, but of slight defects in the mechanics of recording, or of the addition of motor noises, or of the absence of the percussive noises normally made by the human player.

True, the dynamic and agogic gradations in the playing of a fine pianist are extremely minute, but they are all physical elements none the less, and not vibrations of his soul.

All this is not bravura. It is backed by the concrete findings of the experimental method. In every case of a difference of style, differences in tonal intensity and in the rate of tonal succession are found, and, what's more, when these elements are changed, the particular style is gone. An example may serve to illustrate the point. The so-called "pearly" style or touch, upon experimental analysis, becomes simply a non-legato touch of weak or moderate but even intensity. Play the passage legato, that is to say, without the periods of silence between the tones, or fortissimo, and the pearlyness is at once destroyed.

The three determinants are intensity, duration and noise. Whatever else we attribute to the piano, tone is an auditory illusion, and remains so, even though this category will then embrace more than half the familiar pianistic effects. Do I exaggerate? If it seems so, let us consider finally the simple act of pressing down a piano key and releasing it. (The most artistic piano playing is mechanically nothing more than a multiplication of this act.) The player begins with a gentle pressure, gradually increases this to a maximum, and then gradually releases the pressure. When such a dynamic variation is recorded on a dynamograph, the curve a shown in Figure 3 is produced; here the ascent in the line indicates the increase in pressure, and the descent indicates the decrease. The dynamograph permits every variation in the player's touch to be transmitted to the recording point. But when precisely the same movement is made on a piano key, which can move only about three-eighths of an inch, the curve b results. The shaded portion, therefore, or approximately three-fourths of the dynamic tone variation, is an illusion, resulting in this case from a transfer into the kinesthetic field. It has led to the absurd assumption that the string likewise is gradually set into motion, non-percussively. A glance inside the piano will dispel that illusion.

FIGURE 3.—The curve a shows the increase and diminishing of pressure, as recorded by a dynamograph. The curve b shows how the pressure of the pianist's finger is limited by the construction of the piano key.

The auditor, since he does not experience the kinesthetic sensations of the player, cannot get the exact effect imaged by the player, except, perhaps, by the aid of the eye. Nor will the reactions of two auditors be the same. When such illusions are elaborated into the complex reactions to an entire composition or recital we have the beginning of an explanation of the curiously conflicting reports on the same performance: "Splendid! Best piano-playing I have heard!" "Rotten! So amateurish!"

In music appreciation the eye is thus an important determinant. For doubters, especially if they are non-pianists, I suggest the following experiment: Attend a piano recital without knowing who is playing. See no printed programme. Listen throughout with closed eyes. Choose a seat in the rear of the hall. Let only unfamiliar compositions be played. Then attempt to distinguish between relaxed and rigid tone production, flat and curved fingers, degrees of weight-transfer, religious and secular tone qualities,—or even between a Duo-Art and a Hutcheson.

A frown or smile, a gesture, a tilt of the head, a movement of the trunk—De Pachmann developed all of them into a fine art—do the work, not the way the keys are played. The poetry and romance of piano tone no more sound in the actual string than the soul of the unfortunate—or shall we say fortunate?—sheep sings in the gut under a Kreisler's bow.

Ethnology

PRESTIGE AMONG INDIANS

BY ROBERT H. LOWIE

ON MY maiden field trip I had a characteristic experience. The Lemhi Shoshone (Idaho), whose customs I was to record, were a notoriously taciturn lot when it came to revealing their aboriginal beliefs and behavior to a prying outsider. To make matters worse, the only interpreters available at the start were a number of Indian schoolboys whose indifference to my purposes was surpassed only by their ignorance of English. Fortunately, I discovered one Jack Grouse, a middle-aged native sufficiently conversant with the white man's tongue to be able to recite the native traditions and furnish a medley of useful knowledge at the rate of two-bits a story. But Jack's cupidity was tempered with a due regard for the Indian proprieties: as soon as a neighbor appeared on the scene he would slink away, pretending that I was myself nothing but a friendly visitor!

Many years later I was among the Hopi of Arizona. I heard that a medicine-man was going to treat a sick infant that night. The child's elders and the doctor opposed no objection to my presence. Anticipating an interesting session, I arrived early and watched the house filling up with mothers hoping to have their offspring profit from attendance at the ceremony. It grew later and later, but nothing happened. At last the host explained that the medicine-man would not come in. He had been intercepted by an old hag who was scandalized at the idea of a white man's presence. The doctor manifestly could not be less papist than the laity and so balked at entering. The only graceful thing to do was to withdraw.

Such clashes with savage public sentiment and prudery are among the ethnographer's most commonplace experiences. They bring home to him forcibly the value a savage sets upon the opinion of his fellows. Soon he learns more—that the esteem in which the savage is held by them is a matter of the utmost concern to him, and that he will undergo every form of privation for the sole purpose of shining with enhanced splendor among his kind. In fact, this craving for distinction becomes one of the leading motives of his conduct: whatever may arouse unfavorable comment is avoided, while comfort, property, even life itself, may become utterly worthless in his sight if their sacrifice can confer a bit of extra kudos on him.

Take the case of a typical Indian from the coast of British Columbia. In this area, in the early days, prestige rested on property. However, it was not the man who accumulated pelf who was highly regarded, but only that one who with a beau geste gave away his precious belongings or showed his contempt for them by deliberately destroying them. In the literature of the area one constantly encounters tales of chiefs vying with each other in giving away blankets on public occasions. To burn a big canoe or to kill a slave was an ostentatious way of demonstrating greatness, and a rival incapable of doing likewise at once stood reduced to a lower status. Of course the normal Kwakiutl has as much of the acquisitive "instinct" as his Caucasian neighbor; but there is a thing more important to a self-respecting tribesman than wealth, and that is prestige. Practically the same story is reported from Melanesia. The hero of song and saga in the Banks Islands is a man who by dint of successively more exorbitant payments has risen to the highest grade in the men's club house. But, though now virtually a chief, he can still advance socially by giving lavish entertainments to the populace, and slaughtering hundreds of pigs for the purpose.

Our Plains Indians also prized generosity, but real glory could be gained among them only by a splendid war record. Each tribe conventionally defined the deeds to be reckoned as heroic. Pretty generally throughout the region it was considered highly honorable to "count coup" on the enemy, that is, to tag him—irrespective of whether he was killed or disabled. In fact, if one man brought him low and another dashed up to touch the prostrate body, it was the latter who gained the greater honor. For Plains Indians waged war largely as a mere outdoor sport, to be conducted according to strict rules, and these rules corresponded very little to the notions of an economic or otherwise rationalistic man. The Crow thought a great deal of a brave who had cut a picketed horse loose from the midst of a hostile camp. Had they adopted Clausewitz's principles, they would have preferred a man who stole a dozen horses grazing along the outskirts of the camp, but with their perverse idealism they only mildly approved of such a one, while the other was privileged to rise in any public assembly and boast of his feat, which might even help make him a chief.

In aboriginal belief success in war was a gift of the supernatural powers, and they could be most readily conciliated by mortification of the flesh. An ambitious Indian would go to a lonely spot, fast and thirst for days, praying to the spirits and hoping for something to turn up. Possibly the Thunder might appear as a huge eagle, to teach him a sacred chant, and grant him victory. If his prayers remained unheeded, sacrifice went further: he might cut out a piece of flesh from his chest or chop off a finger joint. Not many of my older Crow informants had their left hands intact. Though some of the mutilation was a result of mourning, the men had mostly disfigured themselves while seeking revelations, and the motive of that quest was, above all, the craving for military renown—for a chance to get up in a public assembly and shame one's competitors by a recital of honorific feats.

There were military clubs among practically all the buffalo-hunting tribes, and in each of these societies there were special officers pledged to bravery. They carried standards distinctive of their office; in battle they planted these in the ground and thereafter must not retreat, regardless of the danger. Anyone who betrayed the trust never heard the end of it as long as he lived; his cowardice was constantly thrown into his teeth. On the other hand, if he was killed in battle the entire camp grieved over his death and sang his praises.

Naturally, not every Crow youth was a hero. But the ideal of bravery was incessantly held up before the people from early boyhood, and every-day observation enforced the precepts by showing the advantages that went with a proper martial record. Only a real warrior was ever called upon to give a name to a newborn infant and to receive the emoluments pertaining to that service. Only he was likely to be invited to feasts, to have novices ask for a loan of his sacred regalia—for a consideration—or to have the belles of the camp set their caps for him. The extent to which material and subtler motives affected a Crow was bound to vary with his character; but no one was indifferent to the promptings of vanity, and the very men who had shrunk from exposing themselves to danger might help to carry on the traditional standards by teaching the younger generation that "it is well for a man to die when he is young."

A striking instance of reckless ambition was well remembered and circumstantially recounted by my informants. A young man named Young Jack-rabbit had been wounded by the enemy and permanently disabled. He had never stolen a picketed horse and accordingly could never become a chief, since that exploit involved starting out afoot. Life did not seem to hold any lure for him, now that the highest honor was beyond his reach. So he decided to become what was called a "crazy dog"—to put on special regalia and court death. While waiting for an engagement with the enemy he would come out periodically on his horse, show off his dress, act in the manner conventionally symbolic of his purpose—more particularly by saying the opposite of what he meant and expecting to be answered in kind—and enjoy the plaudits of the camp. "The women liked him very much. . . . The old women cheered him lustily." When he heard of enemies entrenched in a gully near by, he attacked them alone and was instantly killed. His body was put on a horse and brought home by the tribesmen. "They cried all the way. . . . The entire camp cried very much. . . . Without him we moved, we went. . . ."

Thus man does not live by the instinct of self-preservation alone. The savage sacrificed his goods and his flesh, even his life, for the cheers of old women and the laudatory chants of old men. He thumbed his nose at the economic interpretation of history. Sometimes, today, he is asked whether he is not happy, now that no marauding Sioux or Cheyenne is likely to cut his throat. The ungrateful lout says he is not. There is a drab monotony about his present safe and sane existence. He would prefer an occasional raid by the enemy, for it would give him hope of rising to grander effort along the lines of his own ideals.

THE GRANDSON OF THE LIBERATOR

BY R. L. DUFFUS

ON A certain fine Fall morning in 1898 pedestrians along Fifth avenue paused to take in what was even then an unusual sight upon that respectable thoroughfare. It consisted of a gentleman in his late 'twenties, mounted upon a spirited horse and clad in a brownish-yellow riding costume. A wide hat-brim drooped over a pair of spectacles and shadowed what seemed to many observers to be a decidedly familiar moustache. The Spanish War was just over and reverence for martial achievements was at its height. Here and there along the line of march a hat came off and some one shouted. Policemen drew themselves up to their full height and thickness and saluted, touching pudgy hands to the rims of their helmets.

The horseman received these honors with some surprise, but, continuing modestly on his way, turned down a side street and rode his mount aboard a Brooklyn ferry boat. A little group of passengers assembled and gazed respectfully. Nobody said anything. Presently a grimy stoker appeared from the dark inwards of the vessel, thrust the other spectators aside and stared hard. "Say," he demanded, shifting his quid and spitting so neatly out of the corner of his mouth that no one was even splattered, "are you Colonel Roosevelt or ain't you?"

The point of this story is not only that Oswald Garrison Villard, who is possibly America's most militant pacifist, still loves to tell it on himself, but that he actually does resemble the lamented Colonel. He may also be a little proud of the fact, though he would almost certainly not be gratified to be told that a poor newspaper cut of either Roosevelt or himself might easily be mistaken for a portrait of another once distinguished American—the Hon. John F. Hylan, mayor of New York city in the pre-Jimmy days. The incident illustrates a duality which runs through Villard's life and temperament. He is a pacifist who knows as much about the art of war as any major-general. He is a simple, unaffected democrat who, like the lady in the advertisement, loves nice things. During the late war he wrote thousands and thousands of words to prove that Imperial Germany had grievously erred and strayed, but he didn't mind letting you know that one of his German relatives commanded a Bavarian army corps. A Freudian might say that his pacifism is partly due to a subconscious hankering to command an army corps himself. There would be some truth in that, though not much.

But Mr. Villard has a right to a complicated personality, for he comes of curiously divergent strains. On the one side is the lusty, ambitious, dominating Heinrich Hilgard, for whom America was both a refuge for the oppressed and an oyster to be opened; and on the other Fanny Garrison, daughter of the fire-eating, fanatical and uncomfortable William Lloyd. Put two such strains together and something unusual and contradictory is sure to come out of them. In Oswald Garrison Villard's case that tendency is strengthened by a profound respect for family tradition. Indeed, the key to his career as an insurgent and an innovator probably lies largely in his reverence for the past. He is not one of those radicals—if radical he may be called at all—who cannot function until they have outraged the parental sense of what is fit, been cut off with a shilling, and wandered off into the storm. He has tried assiduously to be like his ancestors, all of them, on both sides. He had in his youth, as symbols, two ancestral monuments—the files of Garrison's Liberator and the great stone palace which the elder Villard built, and for a while owned, back of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

But even here there was no simplicity, for Garrison handed down not only a passion for liberty but also, through his daughter, a beautiful and gentle and humane but none the less aristocratic spirit. He was, after all, Boston. And Heinrich Hilgard, known in America as Henry Villard, was not merely a money-maker; he also loved newspapers, freedom and his fellow men—loved them far more tolerantly than Garrison could manage. Perhaps it was a mutual taste for journalism that tied the two families together. The younger Villard pointed out, when he sold the Evening Post, that he and his direct ancestors had been in the newspaper business for more than a century—"as long a consecutive newspaper service as that of any other American family." Indeed, the Bowleses of Springfield were the Villards' and Garrisons' only rivals in this respect.

II

The rebel strain that may be found without long searching in any current number of Oswald Villard's Nation cropped out in Heinrich Hilgard in 1848 so vigorously that at the age of thirteen he found himself exiled from his native town of Speyer in Rhenish Bavaria. Exile was no new thing to the Hilgard family, for little Heinrich's paternal grandfather, Jacob, had been driven out of Germany during the French Revolution because of his injudicious enthusiasm for the new Parisian theory of the rights of man. This is an item worth bearing in mind, for even now, when political philosophers as well as political practitioners are generally agreed that men have no natural rights, Mr. Villard's Nation still echoes the old slogan.

Heinrich's father had hoped to make his son a lawyer, but the boy's reluctance, coupled with the disgrace of his revolutionary exploits, spoiled the scheme. The elder Hilgard threatened to impound his son in the army for a decade or so, until he had come to his senses, and the youngster, with a fine anti-militaristic flourish, fled to America. He arrived in 1853, eighteen years old, nearly penniless and totally ignorant of the English, not to say the American language. There followed some years of pinched and often desperate wanderings. He got work on German newspapers, learned English, taught school, reported the Lincoln-Douglas debates, met Horace Greeley in the Colorado mines, covered Abraham Lincoln's Springfield in 1860, and became one of the best war correspondents the Civil War produced. In 1863 he came up from the fleet off Charleston, went to see Garrison at Boston, and met and fell instantly in love with Fanny Garrison, the liberator's only daughter. If he had hated slavery before, he now regarded it with utter detestation. Three years later, when the Grand Review was over, Lincoln was in his grave and Negro legislators were rioting in the colonial state-houses of the South, Henry Villard and Fanny Garrison were married.

And now the young journalist blazed suddenly into a financier. His last important newspaper assignment was to cover the Franco-Prussian war for the New York Tribune. A chance meeting with German holders of deflated American railway bonds led him into new fields. He was bold and he had the power of inspiring confidence. In the early 'seventies he was pioneering in railway and steamship lines to Oregon. In 1878 and 1879 he met Jay Gould in single-handed conflict and wiped up the floor with him. In 1881, when he was elected president of the Northern Pacific, he reached the zenith of his success. It was during this period that he built the palace in Madison avenue, to which he never returned after 1883. It was in 1883 that he was first "ruined." Four years later he got the Northern Pacific back again, and three years after that lost it for the second and last time. He was left a rich man as clerks and farmers measure wealth, but poor by Wall Street standards. He had, however, never really belonged in Wall Street. Those who lost money in his venture called him hard names, but the fact was, not that he was too hard-boiled, but that he was not hard-boiled enough. He died in 1900.

In the height of his glory the elder Villard had taken a step which had a marked influence upon American journalism as well as upon the life of his son Oswald. He bought the old Evening Post, already bending its hoary head under the weight of years, and entrusted it to Godkin, Schurz and Horace White. He was said to have been prouder of having assembled this journalistic trinity than of any of his victories on the bloody fields of high finance. To the Post he added the Nation, which was at first little more than a weekly edition of the newspaper. He kept his hands off so heroically that the redoubtable Godkin, his bewhiskered chin set with the firmness of a unique rectitude, sometimes took occasion to criticize his financial policies in the columns of his own newspaper. So the tradition grew up that journalism ought to be able, if it wished, to bite the hand that fed it. This illusion was later to cause pain to many tender-skinned and illuminated young newspaper men.

III

Oswald Villard still likes to think that if he had made a different choice of a life work he might have revenged himself upon Wall Street for what the Street did to his father. Perhaps this is the major-general complex in another form. His business affairs are extensive as it is, and it is his firm conviction that he manages them well. One of his main sources of income is an up-State iron mine, which naturally shared somewhat in the prosperity of the metal trades during the World War—though none of its product, so far as Mr. Villard could help it, was made into cannon balls or bayonets. He is fond of signing papers and attending board meetings, and he will interrupt himself in the midst of an editorial article to make crisp decisions, quite in the big business manner. In the Nation office he has a way of being businesslike almost to the point of penuriousness, as those who sell him their literary wares well know. Then he will throw away the resulting savings in some generously aristocratic gesture.

But his first impulses were neither businesslike nor journalistic, but scholarly. He attended Harvard, loved every elm in the Yard, and would send his sons there if they had not developed an inexplicable preference for Yale. He graduated in 1893, at the age of twenty-one, then remained three years longer to take his M.A. and hammer history into the hard heads of freshmen. His historical training bore fruit—and good fruit it was—in his biography of John Brown, which leaves little for any future biographer to say. He dallies even now with the thought that if he had his way he would write books, not groan and sweat in the turmoil of Vesey street. A few years ago he went to an up-State health farm to get back strength lost in a hard campaign. A visiting friend found him leaning wistfully against a fence. The grass was green, the birds were twittering and fleecy clouds were moving across the sun. "Why," asked Mr. Villard, "should I leave this and go back to New York and get into another squabble? Why shouldn't I go with my family to the Riviera or the Rhine and do what I've always wanted to do—write books?" Why, indeed! If Oswald Garrison Villard were condemned to do nothing but write books he would be the most miserable of men. He lives upon the dust of forlorn hopes. His intoxicant is the gore spilled in battle for the down-trodden and the weak.

This uncomfortable impulse was upon him even in his tender youth. He forsook the genteel shades of Cambridge in 1896, when he had just turned twenty-four, and sprang full-panoplied into the journalistic arena. It was characteristic of him, or of his father, or of both men, that instead of going on the Post, where as son of the owner he could not have avoided special privileges, even from the incorruptible Godkin, he got a job on the Philadelphia Press. Here he served his apprenticeship under as rigorous conditions as any city editor could bear to inflict upon a well-to-do cub. A year later a secession of Post writers to the reorganized New York Globe led to his recall to New York, and from that time until 1917 he was the prime mover at 20 Vesey street. Between 1897 and 1917 lies a period of considerable importance in American journalism, and to this period Oswald Garrison Villard made his indubitable contributions.

It is true he was not able to turn the Post into a money-making enterprise. Between 1881 and 1915, according to Mr. Allan Nevins, the paper's entertaining and veracious historian, it earned a net profit of only 2% on the capital invested. Subsequently it did not do even so well. Financially speaking, the Villard family might have been wiser to have put its money in a sock and buried it under one of the weeping birches on the grounds of Henry Villard's Early Norddeutscher-Lloyd palace at Dobbs Ferry.

The causes of this relative failure were several. One of them was Godkin, who was a genius, a gentleman, and likewise a snob of the first water. Godkin not only made few efforts to obtain a large circulation; he positively did not like large circulations. He was so inhuman that he never spoke an unnecessary word to any member of the Post's reportorial staff, and he growled when he was asked to meet his editorial colleagues in a social way outside the office. On this basis he constructed a newspaper whose news and editorial columns were as perfect, within their limitations, as anything ever produced in America. Everyone who wanted to seem cultured had to have the Post lying about, whether read or not. It was the Atlantic Monthly of daily journalism.

Oswald Villard was a far more genial character than Godkin. If pricked he would have bled blood, whereas it is doubtful if anything but ink would have issued from Godkin's veins. With a year or two under Mr. Brisbane he might have been a marvel of popular journalism. But he revered the Godkin tradition because he revered most traditions, and because Godkin had been his father's choice. And reverence for the Godkin tradition meant that the Post would never greatly exceed the top limit of 20,000 circulation which Godkin had consented to attain. It was an influential circulation. Newspaper men everywhere read the Post and its editorials were widely copied and stolen. Godkin secured results at times by hammering on certain subjects until out of sheer boredom some one in authority did something about them. The populace, meanwhile, read the Journal and the World.

Mr. Villard was never able to overcome this discrepancy. Perhaps he cared too much for quality. At any rate it cannot be said that up to the opening of the World War he smashed out many new pathways. His most important policies were handed down to him ready-made. As a grandson of Garrison, he had to stand for equal rights for the Negro. His pacifism, his belief in free trade, and his defence of the feminist uprising all came from one or both of his parents. Not that his service to these ideals was perfunctory or cloisteral. He walked down Fifth avenue in the first suffrage parade, one of a handful of heroic men who braved the jeers and risked the rotten eggs of a mob of outraged fellow males. But real passion does not enter into one's opinions until one has suffered for them, and Oswald Villard did very little suffering prior to the second year of the World War.

Quite the contrary. He was a man still young, of adequate income and assured position. He was welcome in any social circle he cared to enter; he had a wide acquaintanceship; he was a connoisseur of the amenities of life. No one would ever have called him a snob. He went daily into the composing rooms of the Post, helped the make-up men tuck the paper into bed, and was on the friendliest of terms with everyone from the elevator man to the chief editorial writer. He enjoyed these contacts. But with them there went a shade of unmistakably aristocratic feeling. There were men who had been on the Post for years, in the mechanical as well as in the editorial departments. Villard's attitude toward them had in it just a trace of the feudalistic. They were friends and fellow workers, but they were also retainers.

For years this fiery ally of labor clung to the Manchester doctrines—the reader may reconcile them with feudalism as best he may—and the Post remained an open shop. Even now Mr. Villard will ask you, why not? Any workingman could come to him with a grievance. Wages were as high, hours of labor as reasonable as in the union shops. But outside office hours Mr. Villard associated with social groups whose attitude toward the downtrodden proletariat was not quite so genial. They tolerated his pacifism, his pro-Negroism and his suffragism because the years before the World War happened to be years of tolerance, and because nothing he then said or did really threatened the foundations of their social system. He was a good citizen in their sense of that word. His name was associated with all worthy causes. He had a German respect for music and became president, in the course of time, of the Philharmonic Society.

He was, in fact, a comfortable liberal. So, in those halcyon days, were Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, and Mr. Villard's great fellow editor, Mr. Munsey. They were all working for the brotherhood of man and never missing a night's sleep on account of it.

IV

The rumble of artillery on the western front disturbed this pleasant state of affairs. Mr. Villard, unlike Colonel Roosevelt, had never been entertained by the Kaiser, and his family legends did not dispose him to admire the ruling house of Germany. He therefore wrote and published, in 1915, one of the first pro-Ally books to appear on this side of the water. He called it "Germany Embattled," denounced the invasion of Belgium as "wickedly unnecessary," and severely criticized the attempts to promote "political solidarity among German-Americans." For a year or two after that he remained a warm personal friend and admirer of Woodrow Wilson. Those were the Post's rosy days. But soon he began committing indiscretions that the jingoes and Anglomaniacs could not forgive. He remained frankly a pacifist when everyone else was thirsting for blood. In February, 1917, he shamelessly admitted, in a debate with the highly patriotic Henry A. Wise Wood, that he would not "forcibly resist an invasion of this country." Then he broke with Wilson, who had been elected to keep the country out of war and had put it in instead. "The camouflage of ethical precept and political philosophy which has so long blinded the eyes of all but the most observing," he remarked, "has been stripped away and the peoples of the world see revealed, not a friend faithful to the last, but an arrogant aristocrat and a compromising politician." This sentence happens to have been written in 1919, but it reflects a much earlier attitude. Obviously here was something that the professional Hun-baiters, the lovers of blood and iron, the creatures who declared, in 1919, that Mr. Wilson had ended the war before enough blood had been shed, could not tolerate.

So Mr. Villard had to be punished. In 1918 he was forced to resign from the presidency of the Philharmonic Society because, as the guileless reporters said, of criticism of his pacifist views. What pacifist views had to do with music was a question no one but a pro-German would ask. Mr. Villard had friends—or so he had once considered them—who would not now invite him to their homes or even speak to him on the street. The Post suffered as well as himself, even though toward the last he absented himself from the office and left the control of policy in the hands of his safely and not too-critically pro-Ally associates. All up and down the breadth of the land, wherever the professional haters gathered in their clubs, Villard was damned because he was a pro-German who loved the Kaiser's pomp and power and because he was a pacifist who would not resist if an armed Hun assailed his wife or daughter.

What was his state of mind during those years? No doubt it was more complex than appears upon the records. He had been born on German soil, his father was a German, he spoke the German language, he knew the German people as well as he knew the inhabitants of Iowa. He knew that a German with a rifle in his hand was no more cruel than an American, a Frenchman or an Englishman, not to mention a Sikh or a Senegalese. He had a keen ear for hypocrisies and he was only too well aware of the inconsistencies in the Allied position. He had cherished illusions about Mr. Wilson and the place where the illusions used to be now ached. But underneath these outer phases there ran a strong racial current. He was never pro-German in the sense that he wished to see a German Junker bestriding Europe. But he was pro-German, certainly, in not relishing the idea of a Rhineland laid waste by Allied fire and sword, or German civilians starved by an unnecessarily-prolonged Allied blockade. And he may have enjoyed thinking, even though the thought never rose to the surface of his consciousness, that a German boy could handle a bayonet or a machine-gun as effectively as a boy of any other breed. There is that much humanness in him. It is one of his disarming qualities.

It should again be noted that Mr. Villard fell into this position as a result of his innate conservatism. His liberalism, as we have seen, was logically derived from the Manchester school. Even his opposition to military conscription—to that "volunteering en masse" of which Mr. Wilson so poetically spoke—was in the respectable tradition of John Stuart Mill. But after a time he reached the conclusion that "theoretically ideal as the Manchester theory is, human nature cannot live up to it." And it was not long before he found himself in as strange a company as that encountered by Alice in Wonderland when she fell into the pool of her own tears. Irishmen buying cartridges to kill Black-and-Tans, Communists dreaming of the day when Bill Heywood or William Z. Foster would put his feet on the presidential desk at Washington, pacifists with schemes for making humanity lamblike over night, delegates from oppressed nationalities never before heard of outside the encyclopedia, organizers of third, fourth and fifth political parties, apostles of free, or at least less expensive love, advocates of the newer and more obscene movements in the arts—all these came and sat upon the Villard doorstep, and while some went away hungry others perforce were taken in and fed.

Mr. Villard was edged over to the left in spite of himself. He remained, he still remains, principally a Jeffersonian, with a naïve faith in the Bill of Rights. But he came to be associated with what the Japanese call dangerous thoughts. Y. M. C. A. secretaries excluded his publications from their chaste dormitories, and proprietors of Indiana news-stands were increasingly disposed to relegate the Nation to cover in favor of Sappy Stories or Crude Confessions. Thus the picture of Villard the howling radical was created in people's minds. Nothing could be further from the truth, for he is not a radical and he does not howl. But truth, after all, has little to do with the general trend of human affairs.

He had little hand in the direction of the Post after 1917. In 1918 he sold the paper, as he explained, "for the simple reason that I hadn't the means at my disposal to meet the rising costs due to the war." He was too much interested in propaganda to try, as he might have done, to make the Post an evening Times. But he kept the Nation and made it a remarkable hybrid of the very old and the very new, of classic scholarship and vivacious modern prejudice. The Nation is his pet. He is prouder of nothing than of the fact that he has multiplied its circulation six or seven times since he first took it over. Here, as he never was on the Post, he is thoroughly at home as an editor.

V

To call him a great editor would probably be to over-work the adjective. The great editors—Greeley, the elder Bennett, Dana—have been men in whom the success of an institution has been a ruling passion. They might have principles—Greeley had enough principles for half a dozen editors—but the Tribune, Herald or Sun came first. Hence the Tribune, Herald or Sun prospered. But though Villard has a nose for news and can write entertainingly and accurately about anything he has seen, heard and smelt, it is opinion rather than news that interests him. And he is, and always has been, concerned with opinions for their own sake rather than for their effect on circulation. Possibly the same thing can be said of Mr. Hearst—one isn't always sure. But a passionate interest in opinions is a defect in any editor who is not himself a simple-minded atom in a simple-minded sea of population. If he thinks originally and vigorously he makes enemies and loses readers.

But it has not been merely the nature of Mr. Villard's opinions that has kept him from competing with Liberty or the Saturday Evening Post. It has also been the packages in which they were wrapped. He has addressed the suffering and sorrowing proletariat in the language of the wickedly cultured upper classes. He has bemoaned the martyrdom of men who sleep with their pants on, and he has done it in terms only to be appreciated in full flavor by graduates of Harvard University. This is not to say that either he or his publication is dull, for it takes a good deal to amuse a graduate of Harvard University. The Nation may be peevish, but it stimulates; it may not satisfy, but it burns the tongue. But it is no brand for the proletariat. He prefers the aroma of the tabloids.

Those who are capable of judgment in the matter find Mr. Villard, when in form, as forceful and pungent a writer as ever sat in an editorial chair at 20 Vesey street. One of his former associates goes so far as to affirm and declare that if he were to select the best editorials of the Post during Villard's editorship he would expect to find four out of six Villard's—and four out of six of the worst ones, too! For Villard is not natively an artist. His æsthetic tastes are only mildly developed. The German in him is fond of music, but he confesses to weeping over the lamentable fate and even more lamentable tunes, as some critics consider them, of "Madame Butterfly." He adores the plain lines of old houses and the gentle sweep of the Connecticut hills. But he has no passion for the mot juste, the delicacies of verbal rhythm, the subtleties of color. His editorials, written amid frequent interruptions, are likely to be choppy and abrupt, even when forceful. In editorial conferences he is always open to amendment, and as his mind is not analytical he will frequently incorporate in an article an extraneous suggestion which quite butchers the original idea. But give him something to be angry about, and he will write, without pausing and without revising, paragraphs that march, and beat drums, and shout.

Though kindly, he is capable of irritating and of being irritated. This may in part account for the rapid turnover of Nation sub-editors. Some who have departed are said to have gone away under a cloud of resentment. When an associate harps too long on one string, even though that string be the wrongs of the dark-visaged democracy of Haiti, Mr. Villard's sense of proportion asserts itself, sometimes drastically. Then, too, the Nation's salaries are not high in view of the fact that a really comfortable apartment in New York costs twenty thousand dollars a year and seats to the Follies are hardly to be had for less than twenty dollars a pair.

But the continual procession of bright young and able middle-aged men through the Nation office has another aspect. They all learn something, they all are missionaries. Many of them, particularly in the critical field, have later made their mark. Another point to note is that when Mr. Villard adds a new man to the staff he is prone to choose some one more radical than himself. This may or may not be because the young, who are also the radical, are less exacting in their economic demands. I suspect it is more than that. The result is, at all events, that Villard is continually being impelled to publish articles a little more startling than he thinks he approves of. He complains humorously that if he stays away a few days the staff goes Bolshevik—and in a way it does.

Certainly the Nation has several policies which go contrary to Mr. Villard's natural grain. It has lent a receptive ear, for instance, to advanced views of sex and family life, whereas Villard neither practices nor accepts the new libertarianism. Even in minor matters he is quite the Puritan. He does not smoke, except to save himself from being asphyxiated by other men's bad tobacco at editorial conferences. He has gone so far, over the dead bodies of the coroner only knows how many cocktail-loving sub-editors, to urge in the columns of the Nation that Prohibition be given a fair trial.

Ask him if this is consistent with his avowed dislike of governmental busy-bodyism, and he will tell you that he does not deny the right of any man—nay, the duty of any man, if his opinions run that way—to disobey the Volstead Act and rot in jail for it, just as he himself would be shot rather than obey a draft law. And though he touches no alcoholic beverage save beer, he allows Heywood Broun to say in the columns of the Nation that he, Broun, has met "no kind and charming people who are also total abstainers." He reveals a heroic sincerity. He may be vain, he may be illogical, he may sometimes hang large opinions on small facts, but never for a moment is he intellectually dishonest. He couldn't be, any more than he could rob a bank.

In a sense the Nation is Villard and Villard is the Nation. But there is much of him, even the better and saltier part, that never gets into print. There is his complete courage—a quality one might not expect in a man who is not physically aggressive, whose profile cannot compare with Mussolini's, whose handclasp is a little weak, and whose voice always sounds a little tired. But he hasn't the slightest objection to a personal risk when it is necessary. When the American Legion mobbed one of his post-war meetings in Cincinnati he met them quite in the Garrisonian manner and refused to be cowed. He would have walked through the stinking wilderness of the Argonne as gaily as any simple-minded leatherneck if he could have seen any sense in doing so.

But he has another kind of courage; he walks through the barrages of the world unarmored in cynicism. In 1915 he wrote it down as his solemn conviction "that this country loves justice, truth and right; that the judgments of its common people are in the long run profoundly wise." Ten years later he could still speak confidently of "the pure, sound gold that lies underneath the commonness of exterior, the commonplaceness of much of the thinking of our rural and small-town multitudes." This is not buncombe. He believes it. It is true that in private conversation he is more ironic than in the columns of the Nation. He has a trace of the bitterness of the idealist who has slipped on too many banana peels and sat down on too many tacks. When an idol fails him, as Wilson did, he can be savage. But he recovers himself and with perennial youthfulness makes new idols. He is never merely a rebel. He believes something can be done.

He is personally far, far happier than his periodical seems to be. If you ask him pointblank he will confess that he enjoys life. He enjoys little things; he likes to tear the Nation's forms to pieces at the last minute before press-time to make room for a new injustice, a fresh evidence of governmental duplicity. He likes to drive a motor-car faster than is quite safe. He is mildly fond of golf, but will not take the time and trouble to play it when he can go horseback riding instead. His favorite spot in all the world is his farm in Connecticut, where he roughs it in a remodeled Eighteenth Century farm house with steam heat and perfect plumbing. If he can make the farm pay its own expenses he will be content, though he is discouraged at this writing as to that point. He loves to talk hay and potatoes with the man who does the farming for him, and he prides himself on having an up-to-date potato-digging machine to hoist the crop out of the ground. Sometimes he puts on old clothes and putters around contentedly. But he prefers to slip into a well-tailored riding suit and go for a brisk trot around the pastures and along the country roads. He is as good a horseman as ever Roosevelt was.

At his other country house, on the conventional shores of Long Island Sound, he leads a more formal life—for the sake, his friends say, of his family. His town house, which any one who likes may find in the telephone book, is comfortable but requires no special oratory from the conductor of the sight-seeing 'bus. When he is tired of New York and its environs he travels. He goes to Europe, has a whirlwind of interviews which confirm his worst suspicions, makes the rounds of the night life in Vienna, Berlin and Paris in the most lively, innocent, sober and journalistic fashion, and enjoys himself hugely. He goes out to make speeches because, as he says, they help advertise the Nation. He complains sadly about the hardships this entails, but one feels he doesn't suffer as much as he thinks he does. He is death on politicians, with the possible exceptions of Norris, Borah and one or two others, but he would run for the Senate if he were fairly sure of being elected. He is for the oppressed and downtrodden everywhere, but—like the author and readers of this article—he prefers to keep them at a distance until they have bathed and changed their underclothing.

Read his biography of John Brown, read his volume on American newspapers and newspapermen, read his contributions to the Nation, talk with him when he is at his ease—he is one of the most fascinating conversationalists alive—and you may finally hit upon the key to his personality, enthusiasms and activities. He does not belong in this decade at all. Disillusioned though he continually is as to particular men and movements, he retains indomitable illusions about the fundamentals, about truth, democracy, life, the universe. He is indignant about human wrongs, not because he thinks the world incurably evil, but because he thinks that with pains it might be made good. In short, he is one of the last of the romantics.

EVOLUTION, OR WHAT HAVE YOU?

BY KNIGHT DUNLAP

THE most interesting phase of the current controversy between the evolutionists and the Fundamentalists is the disposition on the part of a certain group of American scientific men to agree with their theological and quasi-theological opponents that theological factors really enter into the problems of evolution. Beyond this point the scientific group splits into two factions, one of which triumphantly proclaims the defeat and rout of theology, if not of religion, by science; while the other faction appears to be suffering from the horrible nightmare of painfully clinging with one hand to theology, and with the other to science, as the two vehicles approach a threatening division of the road. To avoid being compelled to let go of either, and the other dream-alternative of being torn asunder, these scientists are frantically attempting to "harmonize" the two flivvers before it shall be everlastingly too late.

But there is another group of men, acutely interested in science, who do not feel called upon to fight under either banner. This group has apparently always been small, and naturally, it is scorned by both of the contending parties. It is to this pacifically inclined group, however, that I rise to announce my adherence.

I am unable to become excited over any conflict between religion and science. Likewise, I am skeptical of the attempts which have been made to form a synthetic union of the two. In fact, these attempts disturb me, and would alarm me if I could take them more seriously than I do. The opposition between the Hebrew and Babylonian scriptures and the doctrine of evolution, and the harmonization of the two, seem as fictitious and meaningless as opposition or agreement between the binomial theorem and a recipe for strawberry shortcake. What belief or disbelief in biological evolution has to do with belief or disbelief in the ancient theologies of the Near East, I am unable to see.

I strongly suspect that some of the more controversial biologists are confused as to the limitations of both biology and theology, and that the same is true of the theologians, both the Fundamentalists and the liberals. Science, in whatever branch, should have to do with nothing but facts and working hypotheses; and if the biological doctrine of evolution is a mere working hypothesis, it cannot possibly be in either conflict or agreement with any strictly religious dogma. I suspect, therefore, that many biologists hold the theory of evolution, not as a scientific working hypothesis, but as a religious doctrine. Concerning some of them, I am fairly certain that this is true.

A working hypothesis is not scientific unless it is scientifically useful. It must be based on facts, and it must contribute to the discovery of new facts. If it is not useful, it has no place in science. A scientific hypothesis of evolution is undoubtedly useful; but the usefulness of a religious dogma of evolution is not evident except perhaps in theology. We may well set high values on biology and on theology; but we should be impatient with both when they get out of their fields.

It amazes some persons to be told that one can consistently believe in the Mesopotamian theory of creation, and also hold the biological theory of evolution; even accepting the cosmology of modern geology. Yet this is strictly true, as was shown by an intelligent contemporary of Darwin. I think it is worth while to take time to make this clear.

II

The problem arose in an amusing way before the rise of the Darwinian theory, in the form of the question whether Adam did nor did not have a navel. Now, the navel is a sort of scar indicating the method of nutrition in uterine life. It is the point of attachment of the umbilicus or navel string, which is sloughed off in the early days of infancy, since it becomes useless with birth. Father Adam, by hypothesis, did not go through any uterine life, and thus had no navel string. Therefore, it has been supposed that he had no navel. If it should be assumed that he did have a navel, it would, on this assumption, show that the story of his creation was false. On the other hand, if Adam were a complete man, a typical man, he must have had a navel. The same apparent conflict might have been made out in regard to the thymus gland, and other organs which show in adult life the effects of changes occurring during earlier life; but the theologians who engaged in the discussion of Adam's navel knew nothing about these organs.

This is really the popular problem of the hen and the egg. Which came first? The hen develops from the egg, but the egg is laid by the hen. This problem is solved by consideration of the fact that the egg and hen cycles occur only when there are hens and eggs; before this period there was no problem. If, by any process of creation or development, the egg of some other animal could be changed into the sort of ovum which we call a hen's egg, then the cycles of hen and egg would begin at that point. If, on the other hand, some animal were changed into a hen, or a hen were created de novo, the cycles would begin at that point. The process from the point of view of biological evolution is a little more complex than it is from the theological view-point, but biology has no difficulty with it.

The problem of Adam's navel was shown to be soluble in the same way. Man is actually an animal which develops from an egg; that is, from a relatively simple organism, a single cell. But if a divinity, considering man in all his details as he is, should create a man having the characteristics usual to the age of twenty-five years, he would of course be exactly the same man as if the divinity had chosen to create him in the form of an egg, and let him grow up to the age of twenty-five. That the divinity was at the same time establishing the laws of growth obtaining from that point on would make no difference.

Of course, then, according to the creation theory, Adam had a navel, and all the other features which from that time on men would universally show. The navel would formally indicate prenatal development, and would factually indicate such development for all later men; but of course it would not factually indicate this in Adam's case. This would not conflict with any law or principle in embryology. Embryology merely considers the facts and order of animal development, and arrives at the conclusion that wherever this process goes on, it goes on in this way. No theologian denies the facts and principles of embryology, for theologians, like the rest of us, assume the existence and continuity of natural law.

If the theologian claims that this process of embryological development commenced a few thousand years ago, he nevertheless admits that it began to operate in accordance with the principles the embryologist has since discovered. The question as to whether it did nor did not commence at such a time may be within the scope of theology but it is certainly outside the scope of embryology. The embryologist naturally would tend to set no anterior limits to the process, except to trace it to certain antecedent processes with which the laws he discovers definitely connect it. He can trace the process of human embryology back to simpler processes in lower forms of life. The theologian cannot dispute this. But if the theologian believes, and asserts, that the tracing is factual only back to a certain point of past time, at which the whole process commenced, and at which the laws were established, the embryologist has not a single fact to controvert him. The theologian might hold that the process commenced with the lower vertebrate animals. He happens to hold that it commenced at a somewhat "higher" stage in development.

The application of the same principles to the whole animal and vegetable kingdoms, and to the geological formations of the earth is equally simple. The vermiform appendix and the whole panoply of the organs of man indicate his developmental relations to the lower forms of life. The formations of the rocks indicate a continuity of processes in the earth extending over millions of years. No theologian can deny this, for these are scientific facts. But if the theologian asserts that the whole cosmic process which the scientists have traced began only a few thousand years ago, there is not a single scientific fact with which to controvert that assertion. We know what processes were going on a million years ago, if the earth existed that long ago. We may assume that the earth did exist; the theologian assumes that it did not. If the two assumptions conflict, as they obviously do, it is because neither is strictly scientific; both are theological, or philosophical, as you choose to name them. All that science can assert is the logical continuity of the universe; and as science, it can set no limits to the factual development. So much is obvious; but it should be equally obvious that it can deny no limits.

Let us now put ourselves for the moment in the position of the Fundamentalist. Suppose the universe as we know it to be non-existent. But suppose the existence of an omniscient and omnipotent God. This God, being by definition omniscient, can think of an infinite variety of universes, none of which as yet exists. He can foresee every detail and every law which would operate in each of these universes. Being also by definition omnipotent, He can create any of these universes. He could even create a universe in which there should be no natural law at all. If He could not, He would not be omnipotent.

Let us assume now, as the Fundamentalist does assume, that this God decides to create a certain universe, namely, the one in which we now live and move and have our being. This universe happens to be one in which certain laws operate; in which, with sufficient knowledge, future events can be foreseen. God being omniscient, foresees perfectly. This universe happens to be one in which organic evolution operates, as is demonstrated by the work of the stock breeder, the plant breeder, and the work of the experimenters in our laboratories in producing new forms of life. This universe, as a logical system, has a continuity which is immense, perhaps infinite in both directions, involving definite series of geological events as well as biological and psychological events. But this universe does not yet exist.

III

Suppose the divinity now to consider this universe in its infinite entirety in time, and the question as to the stage of its continuum in which it is to be brought into existence. The nature of the universe, remember, is decided upon. It is to be this universe, in which the laws of this universe shall begin to operate as soon as the universe, including its laws, is created. As soon as created, it will begin to follow the course laid down by those laws. It is obvious that in whatever stage it is created it is essentially the same universe.

Let us consider two stages in its development, one created at a period, as we reckon time, of a hundred millions of years ago; the other at a period of five thousand years ago. If God decides to create the universe in the former stage, it is obvious that in the course of time it will pass through the latter stage. If He creates it at the latter stage, it will be exactly the same universe, in every detail, as if it had been created a hundred millions of years ago and left to develop up to the latter stage. If not, it is not the same universe, and we are assuming that the divinity knows what universe He is creating. In other words, if this world was created 5,000 years ago, as the Fundamentalist claims, it contained, as soon as created, geological formations indicating an inexpressibly enormous age of previous world, and contained forms of life also indicating a long period of prior development. For the biologists and geologists have shown that this world is a world of that sort; and the Fundamentalists claim that God created this world, and not some other.

If you can grasp these considerations, you can see that the opposition of religion and science, as usually understood, is a fiction, and their reconciliation an impossibility. The efforts of the theologians who attempt to reconcile the Hebrew scriptures by interpreting the days of Genesis as geological epochs are not merely puerile; they are more absurd than that.

There is no question of disproving the Babylonian theory of creation; it can't be done. It is a mere matter of belief. If the geologist or biologist believes it, that belief should make no particle of difference to his scientific work. If he disbelieves it, he is in the same position. The question of disbelief and belief is theological, and philosophical. The real question is: Why should we believe that the world was created, or came into existence, at any particular time at all, or in any particular stage? Here the burden of proof is upon the Fundamentalist, and we cannot expect him to adduce any scientific evidence. We can now show him the details of how the legends of the Book of Genesis were developed; but he may even accept these facts, and still accept the legend as expressing the truth.

It is a deplorable fact that efforts are still being made by men who are otherwise scientists to bring scientific evidence to the support of religious doctrines. The ontological argument, and the psychological argument, formulated by Descartes in the Sixteenth Century, have been abandoned; but the argument from design is still advanced. There is a plan in the universe; someone must have planned it; no one but a God could have done it. This argument has been torn to shreds by the philosophers. It is merely a definition of God as whatever is responsible for the universe. It is not in any sense a proof of the existence of the Hebrew God, much less, if possible, of the Christian God. I think both theologians and philosophizing scientists have made altogether too much of the plan of the universe anyhow. We are too apt to assume values where we know nothing about them. We are apt to speak of evolution as proceeding upward, when if we said it proceeds downward we would mean exactly the same thing, which is nothing at all.

We seem to think the universe, by its changes, is getting somewhere—arriving at or approaching some condition which in our ignorance we assume as more valuable than the present and past stages of the mess. Really, all that we can say with significance is that it changes. That these changes are going anywhere is an assumption, if not mere empty words. Consider geological changes: Ages spent in the elevation of a continent, then ages more in wearing it away and depositing it in the ocean; then ages more in elevating the bottom of the ocean into a new continent, and sinking the old one; then the cycle over again ad infinitum. Astronomical processes are just as aimless, so far as we can see. Nothing that we can discover is capable of human interpretation as the plan of a God such as the ancient mythologists conceived. We cannot prove that it is not the plan of such a divinity; certainly there is more to cosmic process than we can understand. But that is just the point.

There is nothing in cosmic processes which we do understand which can offer any support to the belief in the creative God. It is a question whether God as a mere empty name is useful to us.

This may be true, you reply, but the development of life, especially of man, indicates a plan. Well, perhaps if we knew more about it, it might. But what we do know doesn't raise our estimate of the Planner. Leaving out the question whether the amoeba is of any more "value" than the alligator, we may consider the situation of man in the world. The omnipresence of sin and suffering doesn't argue much of a plan for the development of righteousness and happiness. If these former are necessary to the latter, then the Planner was far from omnipotent, or else not very wise, or else not very kind. Drowning out thousands of helpless human beings, or swallowing them by earthquakes doesn't seem to be the humane method of a Christian God.

"Ah," the Fundamentalist replies, "that is because we don't understand these things." That is exactly my point, and the Fundamentalist admits it in full. You cannot argue to useful truths from a basis of complete ignorance. There is nothing in the physical universe which furnishes a basis for argument for the existence of a Planner such as the Christian God. If we believe in Him, it is on other grounds,—not because of anything science or observation tells us about the world. All these pretended arguments are demoralizing, and at best merely cloud the issue.

IV

In the discussion so far, I have merely intended to bring out the fact that the differences between the Fundamentalists and the conventional evolutionists are after all minor matters, and due principally to intellectual confusion, emotional attitudes, and arbitrary beliefs. Both sides believe in the same sort of a world. The Fundamentalists admit evolution of a limited kind, and the biologists' evolution is a partial type, almost as limited as that of the Fundamentalists.

The world is assumed to be mapped out once for all, like a completed cross-word puzzle. The theologian calls this predestination, the biologist determinism. The eternal fixity of the world is equally assumed by both. The Fundamentalist assumes that the puzzle comes into existence with the squares all filled in, except for a few minor corrections. The biological evolutionist assumes that only the diagram is given and the letters are written in slowly by evolution. But the letters are all fixed in advance by the definition, just the same; and there is only one letter which can appear in a given place. When you get hold of the definitions you know just what has to go in each square. The view of "emergent" evolution, so far as it is intelligible, differs from that of the more conventional type merely by assuming that the definitions of the vertical words are not given so that there is no way of predicting what these will be, until the horizontal words are filled in. But they are just as strictly determined in advance, and could be only what they are later found to be.

From a cosmic point of view, does it matter about a few thousand years, when the result is to be the same? Except from the view of a time-killing game, what does it matter whether the puzzle is given with the squares filled out, or given blank, and then filled out slowly with the predetermined letters? Is the difference between creationism and deterministic evolution really worth worrying about? I should say that from the point of view of a thorough-going evolutionist it is not.

Darwinian and post-Darwinian evolution have been founded on the assumption that things are in process and that forces and laws are not. This assumption is all very well for science, since within finite times we do find changes in things, but no measurable variations in laws. The possibility of changes in laws may, therefore, be neglected tentatively. But when a scientific hypothesis is elevated into a philosophical theory, and given a scope unlimited in time, such details cannot be safely ignored. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the claims of a complete evolutionary theory, such as that advanced by Heraclitus, according to which not merely natural objects, but also natural laws are in process.

The opposition to determinism in the past has taken the form of the theory of the miraculous interference with nature, by which natural laws are still assumed to be fixed, static, but are at times counteracted or supplemented by the lawless action of supernatural powers. Both theological supernaturalism and psychological supernaturalism have been held and advocated, but there has seldom been a doubt raised as to the essential fixity of nature. According to a thoroughgoing evolutionism, nothing in nature is dead, but all changes. Even a God would have to be a developing God, or be ruled out of all consideration in nature, into the realm of pure abstraction. There could not be even a plan of the world, since events, although strictly determinable by law after the occurrence, are not strictly determinable in the future. No one could possibly know what the course of evolution could bring forth, because that is not yet evolved. It seems mere romancing to suggest that the attraction of gravity, and the speed of light may have changed in the course of the evolution of the universe; but if evolution is a fact, that could happen. That space may have slowly changed from a hyperbolic continuum into Euclidean, or may be changing from Euclidean to hyperbolic, is incredible only because we have not as yet conceived of intermediate forms; but then, evolution itself may not be consistently continuous. A changing value of π , on the other hand, is not at all inconceivable.

The conception of a radical evolutionary process in the cosmos may be said to be in the realm of fancy; it certainly is in the realm of metaphysics. But the consideration of this conception is psychologically useful, since it leads inevitably to the conclusion that the limited evolutionary hypotheses which are more popular among scientists are also metaphysical if held as final and as excluding the radical hypothesis. The radical hypothesis would probably have no more effect on actual science than the Einstein hypothesis has on land surveying. The real obstacle to its favorable consideration lies in our fears and other emotional attitudes. It seems to upset our scientific achievements and unsettle our confidence in the universe. But this is merely because we insist, like the Fundamentalists, on making a religion of our science. When we rigorously separate our science from our metaphysics, we have no cause for alarm over philosophical possibilities, and less urge to go around sticking pins in the Fundamentalists. The Fundamentalist also should have his emotional querulousness considerably ameliorated by contrasting the very moderate limited evolution of the biologist and the geologist with the theory of radical evolution.

THE VULGATE IN AMERICAN FICTION

BY WALLACE RICE

AMERICAN novelists and story-tellers have been helpful for many years in recording the American language as it is spoken by all sorts and conditions of men in all parts of the country. But their helpfulness ends when they wander into the field of phonetics and undertake to indicate actual speech sounds rather than mere words and expressions.

It demands long phonetic study and practice to determine precisely how we speak ourselves and what the differences are in the speech of others. To set down these differences in an alphabet of twenty-six letters, of which three are useless, is impossible. The really wise novelist thus avoids the attempt. All reasonable requirements are satisfied if he shows, by the customary abbreviations, that the dialogue is informal. This done, the reader will know well enough what the details are and be able to reproduce them.

Many recent American writers have been shipwrecked in the sea of their mother tongue when they represented the unemphatic auxiliary have as if it were the word of. It is, or should be, a prime rule of those writing dialect never to misspell anything in the common language which is properly pronounced. When Lowell, for example, wrote sez for says, minnit for minute, injer for injures, sum for some, and mus'n't for mustn't in "The Bigelow Papers," he was merely telling the world that his Yankee character was pronouncing these words as they ought to be pronounced. And so with of for have. "I should have gone," in good American speech, is correctly pronounced as "I should uv gone," just as "son of battle" is pronounced "son uv battle"; that is, have in the first is spoken as if spelled uv, and of in the second as if it, too, were spelled uv. Consequently there is no more sense in writing, as Miss Zona Gale does, "Seems to me the Lord would of" than it would be for her to write "son have battle." In the same way Sinclair Lewis, when he has Elmer Gantry say, "He couldn't married Lulu" and on the following page, "I shouldn't have," indicates no real difference in pronunciation. The first form, so misspelled, means, if it means anything, that Elmer knew more about the American language than Lewis. This is also true of the sentence on another page: "If he'd of been an American bell-boy, we'd of jawed away for an hour, and I'd of learned something." It is no more illuminating, this writing of three times where have is spoken properly under the circumstances, than it would have been to misspell been as bin, hour as our, learned as lurnd, and something as sumthing.

One word may be equal to another in speaking, but this does not establish equality on the printed page. Right, write and wright are all pronounced as if spelt rite. "The rite rights the write wright" is comprehensible when read aloud, but nonsense on paper, where each of the four words is undeniably misspelled. Pear and pair are pronounced as if spelled pare, but mixing them in print is ignorance: "He pears a pare of pairs." Writing any one for any other is the same sort of blunder as writing unemphatic of for an unemphatic have.

The Pocket Oxford Dictionary (1926) notes that have is not only pronounced as if spelt hav, but sometimes also like huv and uv, nearly. Henry Sweet in his "Primer of Spoken English" has bav, buv, uv, and simply v. Daniel Jones in his "Outline of English Phonetics" corroborates this, and sets down "I should have thought so" as spoken, nearly, Ishuduvthawtso, going on to say that this is often reduced to Ishiftthawtso, where the have is brought down to the simple sound of f, or unvocalized v. What Gantry really said might be reproduced as Feetufbin'numuricnbelboy, weetufschawdaway-frnour, nItuflurntsunthing. If there isn't any use in writing speech down in such a way, which is reasonably accurate and the way most of us really speak, why monkey with the business at all, at least beyond the accepted abbreviations which indicate informality? The average reader is not a phonetician; neither are most authors.

Nor authorities on the history of words, for that matter. For next comes that ancient and honorable word, eat, pronounced, and misspelled, et, the past tense and past participle of the verb to eat. This misspelling is as gross a blunder as it would be to write "I have red a book; having red a book; I ment to do it." When Miss Zona Gale has her delightful old maid in "Friendship Village" say, "baked in a quick oven and et hot," she is reporting, and misspelling, what has been good English from the year 1300 in print.

Instances are at hand, most of them from the New English Dictionary, of the use of eat as a participle, in the Seventeenth Century, from Shakespeare, Fletcher, Fuller, Evelyn, Marvell, Purchas, and J. Collins; in the Eighteenth, from Arbuthnot, Pope, Malmesbury, Peter Pindar, Dr. Johnson, Prior, and Coleridge: "His limbs the silent frost had eat" and "It ate the food it ne'er had eat"; and in the Nineteenth, from Jane Austen, Marryat, Tennyson: "Princes have eat our substance," Dickens, Thackeray, and a host of other reputables. In the Twentieth Century it can be found in many of the English novelists, older and younger, and in many American books, though generally misspelled.

The Imperial Dictionary (1892) prefers eat to eaten. Lounsbury says in his well-known "History of the English Language" (1894): "The abbreviated participle form eat has been used with varying degrees of frequency in modern English. . . . In the case of eat, the vowel sound of the preterite is sometimes long, as in āte, sometimes short, as in ĕat." It appears also in the grammars of George R. Carpenter, Richard Morris, and Baskervill and Sewell, Americans, sometimes marked as "less commonly used," where commonly seems to be uncommonly used. I have heard it repeatedly from the lips of cultivated Americans, and so has J. Leslie Hall, as he records in his "English Usage."

As for eat, pronounced et, the preterite, the authority is even stronger, Webster's being the only dictionary against it. In England, whether spelt eat or ate, it is pronounced as if spelt et, as in the Imperial, the New English, Stormonth's, the Concise Oxford, and the Pocket Oxford, while the Dictionary of Modern English Usage, 1926, says with finality: "EAT. The past is spelt ate (rarely eat) and pronounced et (wrongly āt)." Why, then, misspell so good a word, merely to be schoolma'mish—and wrong?

II

Het, noted frequently by American novelists as the past of the verb to heat, is now a dialect word, with an instance given in the Oxford Dictionary from Barbour's "Bruce," 1375: "He tuk a culter hat glowand That het was in a fyre burnand," i.e., "He took a glowing colter that was beated in a beconing fire"; and another from Lowell, 1862: "Don't you git het." It has nothing to do with eat, however it is pronounced.

A sharp s in used to, as if yooftoo, is given as the correct pronunciation of the phrase in the New English, the Concise Oxford, and the Pocket Oxford Dictionaries. No American logogogue has heard it so yet, the endeavor here being not to record what we say but to make us say what is recorded. American teachers give themselves a deal of unnecessary trouble in consequence, and their pupils a great deal more. Miss Gale has her quaint character say "I use' to look; I use' to like; I use' to want," and not until her 300th page does she write the word correctly as "I used to take."

It remains to comment on our most affected and pretentious bit of linguistic humbug, the preposterous and unnatural attempt to avoid saying what "The American Language" records as "a tall, a liaison form of at all." Throughout this broad land the pretty-pretty speakers can be heard clicking the t in at and making a nice little pause before the all. Women's clubs, particularly and peculiarly, are infested with it to the extent of making it appear a prerequisite for membership. All over the place, too, the novelists are putting a-tall into the mouths of their characters, only to convey to the judicious the impression that the latter know their American better than their creators do. The two words, as a matter of fact, are always sounded as one, with no half-stutter in the middle and with the vowels and stress exactly those in appall.

Why does anybody take such pains to say it wrong? It would be worth while to learn who began it, where it began and why it was begun, for it is only a few years old. And why, out of the thousands, is it limited to this single idiom? The very persons who say at-all, in the next breath say "a-tall times, a-tall events, a-tall odds." They never think of switching off the at in such phrases as: at large, at length, at last, at ease, at odds, at will, any more than they would in atone, which was formerly at one, or in ado, once at do. They say at Erie, at Arthur's, running their words together just as everybody who knows always has in our language. Have they never heard of Miss Carolyn Wells's Mr. Tait, and what "his tête-à-tête ate at 8:08"?

Nor do these precious ones separate all from any other particle preceding it. In "With all thy faults I love thee still," the first two words are spoken exactly as if withal; all in all is run together, and so are for all the world, on all accounts, and all the rest.

Every record of cultivated speech is against these too-dainty ones. Sweet, already cited, says: "Within breath-groups . . . there is no necessary pause between the words except when we pause for emphasis," and cites "not a tall man" and "not at all, man" as practically identical in sound. Instances of at all written as a single word, like appall except for the change of the p to t, appear on at least seven pages of his phonetic transcriptions. Jones, also previously cited, says: "It must be remembered that there is no break whatever in English between consecutive words which are closely connected by the sense," as instances setting down not at all as nótütawl (nearly) and at once and at all as sounded like single words, with the obscure vowel in the first syllable and the stress on the second.

This sort of thing, ugly, difficult, and betraying ignorance of the fundamentals of American speech, is what G. Stanley Hall once aptly named "linguistic manicuring."

TEN

BY FERNER NUHN

SUPPER was over in the cottage, and Eric had to go after the milk. But he liked to go after the milk. He jumped off the back porch and sidled through the gap in the fence, where three posts were set in a triangle to keep out stray cows. He raced along the black, damp path that cut the brush-land till it reached Sunfish Creek. Eric had named it that. At the creek, scorning the safe double-log bridge (a contrivance catering to decadent adults and skittish young girls), he balanced himself precariously across the single moss-covered and water-soaked "old log," which held back on the up-stream side a floating mass of weeds and driftwood. He climbed sturdily the bluff on the other side of the creek and set out across the Plateau.

The sun was still high in the West, promising a long, gentle June evening. The poised heat of the afternoon had been broken by a light evening wind. Across the Plateau, Eric's two giant cotton-woods lifted mighty shoulders above the lesser trees, the glossy leaves of their top branches flashing like spangles as they caught the sun.

Eric liked to go after the milk. He was proud that he could go after it alone, the mile through the woods to Christiansen's farmhouse. Last Summer his father had gone with him; or rather, he had gone with his father. This Summer he could go alone! It was one of the reasons he had looked forward especially to June, when his father took his two weeks' vacation, and the family rented a cottage up the river. It was no luxurious country-house, but a shack made of barn-siding, painted white, perched on piles four feet above the ground. It was one of half a dozen, each set in its little clearing, well isolated from civilization, the river being their only easy way of approach.

The Manetka river, flowing cool and broad and silently in front of the cottage, was wonderful in its way. But back of the cottage lay what was more wonderful and enticing to Eric: a wilderness of brush and trees and creeks and ponds and hills. Creeks from whose mossy banks frogs leaped in fear at one's approach, entering the water with plops like corks pulled out of bottles; creeks with dark pools harboring unknown great fish, waiting only for the right kind of bait to be caught; ponds where a pebble, well-aimed, discovered whether the little black knob on the surface was the head of a turtle or only the top of a snag. Some of the little hills surely were Indian mounds hiding who knew what mysterious old bones and weapons. . . . Eric's father had found a tomahawk head once, right on the Plateau! It was now in the relic room of the Carnegie Library and bore the small sign: "Indian Tomahawk Head, Found on the Banks of the Manetka river by Thorvald Morgenson, 1910." Eric had never ceased looking for tomahawk and arrow heads.

He entered the path on the other side of the Plateau. He looked longingly at the mighty, sinuous cable of the Grapevine Swing, dropping from the sky-branches of an elm. His eyes climbed to the top of it, and his spirit levitated with his eyes. But resolutely he thrust aside the urge to climb it. Not this evening. Tomorrow morning. Tomorrow morning early. He raced along the path, shooting through the gloom of a thick little wild-plum orchard, emerging into a flat meadow of rag-weed and wild grasses. He stopped to examine an "Indian tobacco" plant. The "tobacco" was still green. Later in the Summer it would be "cured"—brown and crisp—so that one could shell it off with one's fingers.

He walked on, but suddenly stopped short, then moved back three paces, his eyes fixed on the edge of the Sand Pit, thirty yards ahead. His brows hardened with resolution; he took two or three deep breaths, shifted the milk pail to a firm hold in his right hand, and sprinted with all his might. He leaped into empty space, fifteen feet out and eight feet down, and his bare heels pounded deep into the soft sand. The force of landing sent him sprawling on his side; and the milk pail rolled away, losing its cover. He got up quickly, leaving the pail where it was, and knelt down to examine his jump. "Nope," he muttered, sighting across to a peg on the edge of the pit, "missed her by about four inches." He pondered the discrepancy for a moment, shaking his head gravely.

Then he rose up, making a few chance strokes at his knickerbockers with a general view to brushing them, and recovered the milk pail. He knocked it upside down against his knee to shake the sand out of it, and climbed out of the pit.

II

Presently he heard laughter and voices. They came from the direction of Second Bayou, a backwater of the Manetka river, and a favorite retreat of canoeists. Eric crept silently toward the voices. Soon, through the trees, he made out a party of young people, bobbing up and down amid a chaos of baskets and cushions. Their canoes were pulled up on the shore; Second Bayou behind them was a brown mirror with green trees glimmering vertically in it. Eric stalked the party from the side of a tree.

A boy squatting down was fumbling at a pile of sticks and papers. A girl who was watching him broke into rippling, taunting laughter. Turning to the others with a flirt of green skirt she said, "Carl has just used up the last match! Isn't he a fine Boy Scout!"

Carl stood up and ran a hand through his hair. "Anybody got some more matches?" he asked.

The others dropped what they were doing and looked at Carl. "Good Lord, did you use all those I gave you?" said one.

"Damn wood is wet," said Carl.

"What's a weenie roast without a fire?" pouted the girl in green.

Eric by his tree hesitated, trembled, then stepped forward. "I can get you some matches," he said. He surprised himself as much as he did the others.

One girl gave a little yelp, and they all swung around. "Huck Finn to the rescue," exclaimed one.

"Fine," said Carl. "How soon?"

"I'll borrow some at Christiansen's," answered Eric. "I'll be back this way in ten minutes."

"Great stuff!" responded Carl.

Eric turned about and ran, clutching the milk pail against his side. "Run the whole way," he muttered to himself through set teeth. Soon he was bounding over the little grassy hummocks in Christiansen's pasture. He banked around the curve of Christiansen's pond, and clambered over the wooden gate of the farm yard. Pantingly, at the back door, he asked, "Morgenson's milk, please. And . . . could you lend me . . . some matches? There are some . . . people who . . . can't start a fire."

"My, such a hurry we're in!" replied the fat Mrs. Christiansen. "Winifred! Bring Eric some matches." She herself took the milk pail and waddled out to the milk shed.

Eric hurried back with the matches, holding the pail of milk carefully away from him, so that it would not spill.

The party greeted him hilariously.

"Real service, I'll say," said Carl. He was going to take the matches from Eric, but Eric held on to them, looking down at the pile of sticks that had been meant for a fire.

"Say!" shouted Eric, "that's no way to build a fire." He set the milk pail next a tree and knelt down by the sticks. "Let me show you."

"Now, Carl!" said the girl in green, "Take a lesson in fire-building from little Dan Beard."

All the boys and girls gathered around to watch, jollyng Carl and patronising Eric. Eric blushed and was embarrassed, but proud. He scattered Carl's pile with a lordly gesture, wrinkled up a bit of paper, and built a pyramid of small sticks over it, putting the smallest and driest next to the paper. Some of the sticks he tossed aside, grumbling, "Too green!" He stuck a finger in his mouth and held it scientifically in the air. "Wind's from the South," he announced. One of the boys turned to the others as if relaying a message, and sang out, "Wind's from the South!" They all laughed.

Eric carefully lit the paper at a southern point, so that the fire would blow through the sticks. When it began to catch he added larger sticks, and when it was blazing strongly he got up and handed the rest of the matches to Carl. "Here," he said. "I didn't need 'em."

The party laughed loudly. Carl took the matches. Eric was stooping to pick up his milk pail when Carl said, "I lose, and I ought to pay for it. Here, Mr. Dan Beard. Accept this little gift as a token of your victory and my high esteem!"

He handed Eric a fifty-cent piece. Eric's jaw dropped. Slowly he reached for it. "Gee," he exclaimed. "Thanks!"

The incident had turned from something quite interesting, something to tell the folks, to something terrific, inconceivable! Eric hurried home, balancing the milk pail in one hand, clutching the fifty-cent piece in the other. He would not banish it to a pocket. It grew hot and moist inside his clenched fist.

He was not aware of the Sand Pit when he circled it, did not see the Grape-vine Swing, nor even his two giant cottonwoods withdrawing themselves grand and mysterious in the twilight. His mind was all in his palm. He had never owned a fifty-cent piece before—never outright, like this. His Christmas and birthday money Dad always put away, to save for him when he grew up. He had never had more than a dime in his own possession, to do with as he pleased. It seemed impossible to have a fifty-cent piece, got by himself, hard and real in his palm. What should he do with it? Well, he would keep it for a while, anyway, in his personal possession, while he decided what to do with it. At Sunfish Creek he took the double-log. This was no time to be running risks on the single-log.

III

Back in the cottage he put the milk in the ice-box, and hurried into the big screened-in front porch, where the lamp was lit. Father was smoking his pipe in the large wicker chair, his heavy blond brows fixed in their permanent thoughtful scowl, the creases in his forehead black-pencilled by the slanting lamplight. Mother was turning the pages of a woman's magazine; her great white fore-arm gleamed as it passed close to the lamp. Thorvald, Jr., chubby and contented, was pushing a cast-iron locomotive around the edge of the rag carpet.

"Shut the ice-box tight?" asked his mother, without looking up.

Eric answered, "Yes," energetically, brimming with his stupendous adventure.

"What took you so long to-night?" his mother now inquired.

Then it all tumbled out. Eric's blue eyes were big with excitement as he told it. Father turned his head, holding his pipe in his hand. Mother's generous, double-chinned face was kind with interest. Tow-headed Thorvald, sitting on one leg, drank it all in with wide eyes and open mouth. At the end, Eric held up the fifty-cent piece triumphantly, like a successful hunter displaying a trophy.

Thorvald wriggled on to his feet and stood looking at the piece of silver as if mesmerized. Father said, "You better give it to me and let me take it to the bank. Next thing you know you'll lose it if you leave it around here."

The glow died out of Eric's face: his hand dropped slowly to his side. Everything went very still inside of him, and he heard a June-bug thumping against the screen trying to get in. "No! I want to keep it!" he said emphatically.

"What do you want to keep it for?" asked his father.

That was hard to say. What does one want to keep anything for, except just to have it? Eric stammered, "I just want to keep it!"

"The bank will keep it for you," said his father. "Keep it safer than you can."

"I'll keep it safe!" cried Eric eagerly. Of course he would keep it safe! As if he would lose it!

"Naa, but what good will it do you here? You can't buy anything with it here."

Eric's eyes fell away from his father's, roved to his mother's, then to the floor. "I know it," he said. "But I just wanted to keep it awhile." He was almost ready to give it up. He hated disagreements with his father.

His father puffed his pipe. Why couldn't children see what was good for them? The kid must learn to do things right; he must learn to save, to save in the right way. Where would he have been if he hadn't learned to save every possible nickel, since his parents had brought him from Denmark, when he was younger than Eric?

Presently Mrs. Morgenson said, "Oh Thorvald, let him keep it awhile if he wants to."

Mr. Morgenson went on puffing his pipe. The June-bug was still blundering against the screen. At last he took his pipe out of his mouth. "Ja, and lose it likely as not," he said, and went on puffing. So Eric knew he could keep it. But much of his high joy was gone. He went to bed feeling ugly and uncomfortable.

He awoke with the sunshine blinding him from a square on the floor. He rolled over on his back and looked up at the rafters, the white-wash scaling off them in places. There was one blackish spot that looked like a man riding a horse. . . . Then suddenly he thought of yesterday, and the fifty-cent piece. He hopped out of bed, and jerked open the top bureau drawer. Yes, there it was. It was real. It all had happened. He decided to wear his overalls today. He would put the fifty-cent piece in the deep watch-pocket on the front of them.

During breakfast, Donald Berger's whistle sounded in the distance and intermittently nearer and nearer. Eric answered it. Soon Donald came bashfully in, and half sat on a chair while Eric was finishing his oatmeal and coffee-cake. But Eric couldn't finish before he had to jump up, work the fifty-cent piece out of the watch-pocket, and show it to Donald.

"Where d'yuh s'pose I got it?"

Donald couldn't guess. Eric told him all about it, emphasizing especially and with great scorn how those fellows didn't know a thing about building a fire. Donald's black eyes glowed sympathetically with Eric's blue ones, reflecting the scorn and the triumph.

After Eric had gulped down the last milky spoonful of oatmeal they went outside. Immediately there came an astonishing changeover Donald. Gone the quietness; gone the bashfulness. Donald whooped. Donald ran. Donald leaped high in the air and caught the small bole of a sapling elm tree, spiralling around it as he gradually slipped back to the ground. His black eyes sparkled. He dashed for the river, hurtling to a certain and watery grave. But at the last moment he collapsed and rolled on the ground, bringing himself up on his stomach at the very brink of disaster. Eric ran after him.

They sat on the boat landing, swinging brown, toughened feet above the water. A brisk breeze chafed the river; chips of sunlight rocked and glinted all over it. They discussed what they should do that day. From back of Donald's black eyes came troupes of brain-children, full-grown, winged and audacious. Eric, the cautious, illegitimized them one after another. At last they agreed on a fishing trip: "An all day fishing trip, 'way up Snag Creek, further than we've ever been before."

There was permission to be got, lunches to be packed, worms to be dug. They set about executing these agenda immediately. Donald rushed away after the parental sanction, galloping down the shore path at a terrific rate, whirling one arm in circles like a windmill.

IV

By ten o'clock they were on their way to Snag Creek. The lunches were in a haversack, borrowed from Donald's older brother, who was a Boy Scout. Each carried a bamboo fish pole, the lines wrapped around them, the hooks stuck into the corks. Eric carried an old salmon can, in which were the worms, and a canteen slung at his side. A spirited wind put zest in the landscape, whipping the little trees with sudden gusts, flinging up the skirts of weeping willows, rattling, high in the air, the hard leaves of giant cottonwoods. Across the blue sky white clouds raced, getting in the way of the sun sometimes, and darkening—just for a momentary contrast—the flashing green of trees and grasses.

They crossed the Plateau, heading for the neck of land between Bull-head Lake and Mirror Lake. On the banks of Bull-head they stopped at the Chinning Limb. They could never resist it. Donald slipped off his accoutrements, caught the limb, and chinned himself nine times, grunting hard on the last, and fell in an exhausted heap. Eric chinned himself eleven times, taking them more slowly, and was not exhausted at the end. In the meantime, Donald had wholly recovered, and, as soon as he noted that Eric had beaten him, dashed toward Mirror Lake. When Eric caught up with him he was studying intently some marks on the wet sand of the Neck.

"I think," said Donald, "it's muskrat, but it may be skunk." He sniffed. "Don't you smell just a teeny smell of skunk in the air?"

Eric sniffed. "No!" he said, scornfully. "What's eatin' you!"

"I guess it's muskrat," Donald conceded.

They traced the tracks as far as they could, till the tracks were lost in the grass on the other side of the Neck. Donald said, "You know, a real forester, or 'n Indian, can read the woods like a book. Everything means something. Why, for instance, the way that stick is lying there would mean something to a real forester."

The stick, perfectly innocent and unnoticed a second ago, suddenly took on a mysterious individuality. There was something about it, the way it lay crookedly on its side. "Or a broken weed, like this one," said Donald. Eric looked at the weed. Then he looked all around him, and saw the trees and sand and water in a new light. All of it, waving in the wind, was suddenly vibrant with mysterious meanings. He was impressed.

Donald, however, was through with reading the forest. "Come on!" he shouted. "Let's get to Snag Creek!" They ran single file through a damp hollow where Titan weeds fought to a height of six feet on either side of the path. The rank, lusty smell of them filled the air. They clambered out at last on to the high banks of Snag Creek, and stopped to look over the edge at the water flowing slowly below. Donald spied a fish, a big carp, gliding like a shadow three feet below the surface. Then Eric spied two more. "What a cool, lazy life a fish leads!" they thought. The wind swooped down, and sent a flurry of ripples across the creek, screening the lazy carp from view. Donald was all for settling down and fishing right there. But Eric said, "Naw, we've fished here before. Lots of times. And never caught anything, either. Those carp are too wise. We want to go 'way up the creek where we've never been before." Donald was easily converted. The thought of fishing where they'd never fished before, where maybe no one had ever fished before. . . .

They followed the banks of the winding creek, racing up and down ravines, stalking along brown, narrow cow-paths between tall firs and squat red cedars. When the creek shallowed so that the golden sandy bottom was visible all the way across they splashed to the other side, and came back again at the next shallows. The sun, climbing to noon, grew hotter, and suddenly Donald stopped. "Let's eat!" he burst out.

They dropped beneath a white oak tree, which threw a shade over the edge of the bank. Donald dug the lunch out of the haversack. The sandwiches of jelly, peanut butter, and cold meat were squashed and twisted, but ravishing as the teeth bit into them. The water from the canteen was lukewarm, but it was water.

About an hour later Eric caught the first fish. He had dropped his line into a pool just above a tree that had fallen into the creek, its branches trailing ingloriously in the stream, the whorl of its brown roots rearing up out of the broken earth of the bank. Eric had got many tantalizing nibbles, and some false alarms when the cork sailed away pulled by a fish too small to take it under. At last came a sunfish big enough to do business. It yanked the cork under, and made off with it at a downward slant.

Eric let him have it. Down, down went the cork, rocking slightly from side to side as it disappeared. Eric pulled slowly, then gave a jerk that brought the sunfish flashing out in a silver arc through the air. It landed safe and helpless on the dry grass above. Donald came running. There was consternation when it was discovered that neither had brought along a "stringer." Eric finally had to make one of a yard of line off his pole and a couple of sticks. Through gill and mouth he threaded the sunfish, and moored it in the shallows.

More sunfish came, and some bull-heads: slimy brown fellows with beady eyes, and ugly feelers drooping like a mandarin's moustache. Donald raised a hue and cry when a monstrous creature dashed away with his line, forcing him to exert all his strength to save the tackle. Eric dropped his pole and ran over, encouraging Donald with astute and clamorous advice. At last the fellow was captured and lay gasping on the bank, but he turned out to be a vile dog-fish, black and leathery, and leering with all his teeth. Donald's proud excitement turned to anger; he killed the dog-fish with a stone and hurled him into the bushes.

In the middle of the afternoon the fish stopped biting, and Eric suddenly drew a deep breath and realized how hot it was. The wind had died down; the creek lay glassy and inert under the sun's rays. The landscape slept and tried to save itself till evening. Then came Donald with his pole over his shoulder. He sat down on the edge of the bank and looked up the creek with a far-away look. Then he stiffened suddenly, and life came back into his eyes. "Eric!" he cried.

Eric looked at Donald, then upstream where Donald was pointing. "See that sandbar?" said Donald. "Wouldn't that be the best place you ever saw to go swimming! Golly!"

Donald jumped up and started for the sandbar, ripping off his shirt on the way. "Come on!" he yelled. Eric became inoculated with Donald's excitement. He started to pull in his line. Then vague thoughts came into his mind: holes—the bugaboo of swimmers; his father's warnings; and his promises to his mother not to go in swimming unless father was along. Dang it all!

He stood undecided, watching Donald, who had poised just long enough on the sandbar to fling off his shirt and let his knickerbockers slip to the sand. He was capering in the shallows yelling, "Come on! Gee, this is great!" He scooted along the edge of the water, kicking a glistening sheet of it in front of him.

Eric pulled in his line decisively. He would go wading at least. He ran along the bank and jumped off on to the sandbar. Donald dashed toward him, kicking water at him. "Get off your clothes! Get off your clothes!"

Eric drew back, and, before he knew it, had slipped off his clothes. He raced along the sandbar and jumped off the end of it where the water was a couple of feet deep. He hit the water with a spank; it curled up around him, cooling, glorious. Then he had a water-fight with Donald, that began with jetting water from cupped hands and ended in a tussle in the shallows. They ran a race, but Eric protested his defeat by claiming that he had to run where the water was deeper. They shifted lanes, and Donald won anyway. Then they began to look about them, and to venture out into the middle of the stream. Eric struck a step-off and drew back, scared. Gingerly he tested the depth of the step-off, sliding tactual toes down the crumbling sides. He found that the creek was only waist deep at the bottom.

Here one could swim! He thrashed about, using the dog-stroke, thrusting his chin up out of the water. He was not a natural swimmer. But now he was the admitted leader, Donald the follower. Donald ventured only where Eric ventured.

At last they grew tired of swimming, came out of the water, and lay naked on the white, hot sand. They rolled about and covered themselves with sliding, tickling sand. Before they could put on their clothes again, they had to dash back into the water to wash themselves. The water felt colder than before. They decided to go back to the cottages then. They could not risk being late for supper. They gathered up their gear, pulled the string of fish out of the water, and set off for home. They were content now to employ one side of the creek only.

V

Eric was undressing for bed. He was very tired. He had begged hard not to have to wash his feet, but his mother had made him. The light from the lamp on the front porch slanted through the doorway of his bed-room, making a yellow streak on the wall. From over the partition he heard mother putting Thorvald to bed.

As he dropped his overalls on the chair, suddenly he remembered the fifty-cent piece. He had forgot all about it up to this minute. He fumbled the overalls to find the watch pocket. The fifty cents wasn't in it. He was electrified to full consciousness. He couldn't believe it wasn't there. He felt again. Gone. Rapidly his thoughts went back over the day. He wondered if he had put it somewhere else. There was just a chance. . . . He went over to the bureau and opened the top drawer. It wasn't there; of course not. He went back to the overalls, fumbled the other pockets, but without hope of finding it. He turned once about in the middle of the room, feeling helpless, like an animal in a cage. Without deliberating about it, he finished undressing, and got into bed. Instinctively he did not want his folks to know that anything out of the ordinary had happened.

He stared up at the roof, lit dimly by light from the porch lamp, and shadowed grotesquely. A moment ago he was going to bed just as on any other night; now this thing had happened. It absorbed his whole consciousness, giving him an unreal feeling, as if he were someone else. Try as he would, he could not make himself feel calm, natural. It was one of those times when the world grew unstable, when one lost confidence in it, and in oneself.

His mind began racing back over his movements during the day. He tried to determine when he had handled the fifty-cent piece last. Did he have it with him going up Snag Creek? He must have. With distress he recalled all the cavortings on the way. He might have lost it in any of half a dozen places along the creek . . . or in the creek! The whole trip took on an evil cast. Then, with a shock, he remembered going in swimming, taking off his overalls. Of course! It had fallen in the sand.

He reproduced in his mind the place where they had gone in swimming. Only now he saw it as in the dark: Snag Creek flowing blackly by in the night. A vague feeling grew in him, took shape, and suddenly he saw it all in a flash: he was being punished for going in swimming. The waters of Snag Creek grew darker and more swirling as he thought about it. That step-off! He felt as if he had escaped from the brink of a precipice. Escaped with his life, but now he was being punished for it.

He was being punished by having lost the fifty-cent piece. With sharp clearness he remembered how his father had wanted to save it for him. And he had been so sure he would not lose it! Yes, he saw what he had got himself into. His father would ask him soon about the fifty-cent piece, what had happened to it. He wouldn't be able to tell. They would question him. It would come out about the swimming. . . .

Suddenly the ceiling went black; his father had put out the lamp. He heard his father and mother getting ready for bed in the next room, heard them talking quietly together. They must not know about this. They were enemies. But they didn't know it—yet. Presently he heard his father's deep, regular breathing. His father was asleep and he was awake. He alone in the world was awake. The steady sing-song of night noises, the croaking of frogs, made him all the more alone.

He mulled it over and over again, till the back of his neck ached. There was just the slimmest chance that he might find the fifty-cent piece, somewhere—perhaps in the sand where he had taken off his overalls. But he hardly dared hope for that; indeed, it was impossible to conceive of such a thing actually happening: to imagine finding it there, shiny and real in the sand. It couldn't be. The fifty-cent piece had become a mythical thing, a dream. In the bottom of his stomach he felt he would never see it again. This time he was up against something beyond ordinary happenings, beyond ordinary luck. Working against him he felt strong, dark forces—God and his parents.

But gradually he began to see what it was he would have to do. He formed a plan. Next morning he would get his mother to let him go fishing again. He would go alone. He would take his pole and his lunch, as usual. But more than that he would make up a little camping kit, a frying pan, knife, and things. He would go 'way up Snag Creek, past where they had gone in swimming. If he found the fifty-cent piece, well and good. He would come back. If not, there was no coming back. Not for a long time. Not for weeks and months. He must be prepared to live in the woods, alone. Others had done it. There was the story of Juan and Juanita. They didn't have any equipment to begin with even, not even fish hooks. He would take along plenty of fishing tackle. There would be berries to eat; perhaps roots to be dug. Perhaps he could find some farmer with whom he could trade fish for vegetables and milk. Or he could steal the vegetables. . . . He was an outcast. . . . He must take along a blanket, and a piece of canvas to build a shelter. He would hide the blanket and the canvas in the woods first, then pick them up later. A hand axe. . . . He would find a spring. . . . A piece of rope. . . .

VI

He awoke next morning with a heavy sinking feeling. Then he remembered. It wasn't a dream. It was like an awful dream, but it was real. Life was black. He got up wearily, feeling like an old man. Half-heartedly he dipped his hands in the cold water from the kitchen pump, and barely dabbed his face with it. He didn't feel up to the harsh exigencies of life at all. He went outside, looked at the river, looked at the woods. The woods were green and gay in the morning sunlight. But they were not inviting.

His mother called him to breakfast. He came dragging in. She asked him what was the matter with him. He said, "Nothing!" and feigned a hearty appetite. She was very solicitous—asked him if he didn't want another piece of banana to slice on his oatmeal.

Thorvald came to him with his engine—"broke!" Eric looked at it. Simple matter! He twisted a casting back into place, tightened the nut that held it, and returned the engine to Thorvald. Thorvald tried it on the floor. It worked! Thorvald turned a radiant face to Eric, full of the adoration universally accorded to omnipotence when it is also all-gracious.

Eric stood on the front porch, looking out over the river. He had found out that his father had gone to town for the day—left early with a man, who went back and forth daily in a launch. His brows were tightened into a young frown, which promised, some day, to stiffen into his father's permanent scowl. He was coming to a decision. He would postpone until tomorrow this going away for good. He was pretty safe for today, anyway, with his father in town. Today he would simply go on a fishing trip, and look for the fifty-cent piece. Yes, that would be the thing to do. No use hurrying matters. If he didn't find the fifty-cent piece he would come back to-night, and tomorrow morning leave for good. He went back to the kitchen to ask his mother if he could go fishing again today.

"Today again?"

"Yes!" He grew voluble about a wonderful deep pool they had come across yesterday, but hadn't had time to fish. Oh yes, he must go right away again. His mother shrugged her shoulders incomprehensibly, and gave in to him.

He dug worms, gathered his fishing tackle, and got his mother to fix a lunch. Then off through the woods he trudged, by himself.

VII

Mrs. Morgenson was sweeping up after the noon meal. It hadn't been much of a meal, with just herself and little Thorvald to eat it. She had been glad even for Thorvald; she hated to eat alone.

She stooped down to pry open a small loose board in the floor, which, taken away, left a hole through which crumbs and dirt could be swept. Now Thorvald came running to watch her sweep the crumbs into the hole. His interest in this phenomenon never waned. He got his head right in the way of the broom, trying to see where the crumbs went. "Eja!" said his mother. "Get out of the way, or I'll sweep you through, too!" On his friendly little posterior she laid a gentle tap with the broom. He looked up, smiled appreciatively, and moved aside. He was a bright one! Eric was bright, too, but he wasn't as open as Thorvald. She said, "All right, sonny. Now you can put the board back." Thorvald squatted down and laboriously fitted the board back into the hole.

Mrs. Morgenson washed her hands and face. She was very hot. Then she got some mending and went outside to see if she could find a breeze. As she sat down on the weather-stained bench in the thick shade of the hawthorn tree she was surprised to see Eric sidling through the posts of the back gate.

"Why Eric!" she exclaimed. "What are you back so soon for?"

Eric came into the shade, and spilled his fishing gear out of his right hand. His left was hanging on to the breast-pocket of his overalls. His face was fiery red and there were black splotches of perspiration on his blue shirt. But he seemed quite happy. What a funny, unaccountable little fellow he was!

"And you didn't get any fish either!"

"Nope!" said Eric airily. "The fish just weren't biting today."

THE ROLL OF HONOR

BY T. J. BARTLETT

LET Rotary be at peace: there is no Bolshevism in the American colleges. The higher education of the youth of the Republic is in good and safe hands. Nothing shows it more clearly than the list of men upon whom, of late, the great mills of learning have bestowed their honorary degrees, and in particular the lofty degree of Legum Doctor, the goal and dream of every aspiring bank president and United States Senator in the land. Is Clarence Darrow an LL.D.? He is not. Is young Bob LaFollette? He is not. Are Senator Norris, Senator Walsh, Mr. Justice Brandeis, Herbert Croly, Max Eastman, Professor Felix Frankfurter, Roger Baldwin and Senator Couzens? No. Are Senator Borah, Senator Wheeler, Scott Nearing, Upton Sinclair, Morris Hillquit, W. Z. Foster, Fremont Older, Frank P. Walsh, Arthur Garfield Hays, Frederic C. Howe, Paul U. Kellogg, Robert Morss Lovett? No again. But Charlie Schwab is, and so is Otto H. Kahn, and so is the Hon. Harry M. Daugherty, and so is the Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, and so were the late Judge Elbert H. Gary, and the ever-to-be-lamented Wayne B. Wheeler, of the Anti-Saloon League.

Here normalcy has its sweet rewards, and Bolshevism, however academic, its swift and terrible penalties. Miss Jane Addams, a couple of decades ago, was accumulating LL.D.'s very rapidly; she had got three by the year 1910, and seemed likely to become a formidable challenger for the National Ladies' Cup. But then she began to toy with subversive ideas, and since then she has got no more. Oswald Garrison Villard has come to the same just retribution. He got an LL.D. from Washington and Lee in 1906 and another from Lafayette in 1915, and seemed to be going strong—but in 1918 he took over the Nation and began bawling for the Bill of Rights, and since then no American college has dared to honor him.

Dean George W. Kirchwey, Dr. Charles A. Beard and Dr. John Dewey have paid the same price for their contumacies. In 1908 no less than three great universities, Yale, New York and Cincinnati, gave Dr. Kirchwey LL.D.'s, but since then he has got none. Dr. Beard got one from his alma mater, De Pauw, in 1917, but almost immediately he started his historic ruction at Columbia, where he was professor of politics, and since then he has been overlooked. As for Dr. Dewey, he had two when the war began, and seemed slated for at least half a dozen more, but his increasing weakness for Liberal heresies put him on the black list, and since 1917 only the far-away National University at Peking, China, has ventured to honor him.

But if the great educational rolling-mills of the Republic are thus chary about giving their countenance to men who are unsound on the national sacraments, they are very liberal in rewarding pillars of orthodoxy. There is, for example, the case of the aforesaid A. Mitchell Palmer, under whose auspices the celebrated Sacco-Vanzetti case began, and without whose heroic efforts in the perilous days of 1918-1919 this land might well have become a province of Soviet Russia. His patriotic labors did not go unnoticed by university authorities. In 1919 both Swarthmore and Lafayette made him an LL.D., and the following year George Washington University bestowed the same honor upon him. Dr. Palmer's able successor, the Hon. Harry Micajah Daugherty, as patriotic a man as ever occupied the office of United States Attorney-General, was recently crucified twice by the enemies of his country. On two different occasions he was put on trial and charged with using his office to defraud the government, but, as every right-thinking American knew would be the case, he was triumphantly acquitted both times. Well, it is to the eternal honor of Ohio Northern that it recognized his worth and devotion to his public duties Anno Domini 1924, when it made him a doctor of laws.

The office of Attorney-General is one of the most important in the Federal government. Next to the Secretary of State, the Attorney-General does more, perhaps, than any other great officer of state to keep communists, anarchists, democrats, and other persons with diseased ideas out of the country. Fortunately, the public servants who have occupied the office have always been men of unadulterated Americanism, and, as I have shown, the universities have done all in their power to encourage them in their work. Let me but add the case of the present incumbent, the Hon. John Garibaldi Sargent, who, even in the brief time he has been in office, has shown himself to possess such powers as make him certain of a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court. The more alert American colleges noticed this very quickly, and so long ago as 1925, the same year in which he was appointed, three of them, Tufts, Middlebury and Norwich, rushed to make him an LL.D. Dartmouth was eager to honor him similarly the following year, but his onerous public duties before a committee of the Senate prevented him from going to Hanover to receive the degree. If we count the Dartmouth degree, he now has as many LL.D.'s as Chief Justice Benjamin Nathan Cardozo, of the New York Court of Appeals, who took, however, twelve years to win what the Hon.

Mr. Sargent won in a little over one year.

I have just mentioned the State Department, and naturally the name of the Hon. Frank Billings Kellogg, its chief, comes up. He distinguished himself as a diplomat of the high rank of the lamented Walter Hines Page at the Court of St. James, and as a result was promoted to his present post by President Coolidge. His services to the Republic as Secretary of State have been of the highest public value. He kept the dangerous bomb thrower, Saklatvala, away from these shores. He saw to it that the Russian propagandist, Mme. Ambassador Kollantay, did not cross the United States on her way to her post in Mexico, and thus saved millions of American youths from becoming Bolsheviks, atheists and free-lovers. And he kept Mme. Karolyi and her un-American doctrines from entering the land. Once again the academic authorities grasped the significance of the man, and made public acknowledgment of the national debt to him. Only this year the great New York University conferred upon him the degree of doctor of laws honoris causa. Shortly before he was similarly honored by the celebrated University of Pennsylvania.

But of all the public officials now in practise in America the Hon. Herbert C. Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, is the champion LL.D. collector. In the last ten years he got an average of almost two a year, and from institutions as small as Oberlin and as imposing as Harvard. The other universities which have honored him are Penn College at Oskaloosa, Iowa; Cornell College at Mt. Vernon, Iowa; and Yale, Princeton, Rensselaer, Brown, Pennsylvania, Columbia, Swarthmore, Tufts, Williams, Rutgers, Alabama, Dartmouth, George Washington, Boston, Virginia, and the Johns Hopkins. In addition he has got degrees from Oxford, Manchester, Liège, Prague, Louvain, Ghent, Lemberg, Cracow, Brussels, Warsaw and Lvov. After him comes the Hon. Andrew William Mellon, the greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Hamilton. He has received eight LL.D.'s in the last six years, and from the following institutions: Dartmouth, Rutgers, Harvard, Princeton, Columbia, New York University, Pennsylvania Military Academy, and the University of Pittsburgh. Close to him comes the Hon. Curtis Dwight Wilbur, formerly Chief Justice of the celebrated Supreme Court of California, and now Secretary of the Navy. The first institution of higher learning to get the true measure of the man was the University of Southern California, which made him an LL.D. in 1923. But as soon as he began making speeches as a Cabinet officer, Occidental College, of Los Angeles, and the Pennsylvania Military College detected the Big Ideas in him, and also made him an LL.D.

The Hon. James John Davis, head of the Moose and of its branch office, the Department of Labor, was made a doctor of laws honoris causa by Bucknell University and the Pennsylvania Military College only recently. But undoubtedly many more such honors are in store for him. Big men in this country do not remain in oblivion long. The Hon. Harry S. New, the learned Postmaster-General, has one LL.D., and the Hon. Hubert Work, Secretary of the Interior, has two, not to mention an honorary Sc.D. The latter was honored by the University of California on March 23 of this year—apparently the university authorities called a special session for the purpose. His second LL.D. was given him by the University of Pennsylvania in 1925. In honoring Dr. Work with the dispatch it did the University of California evidently took a hint from the manner in which the great Butler University, of Indianapolis, conferred an LL.D. on the Hon. Mr. New this year. Butler, in its eagerness to be the first institution of higher learning to recognize his accomplishments in the Post-office Department, could not wait till June, so it made him a doctor of laws in February.

The Hon. Charles G. Dawes, the heir to the throne, so far lacks an LL.D. So does the Hon. Dwight F. Davis, Secretary of War. Mr. Dawes got an LL.B. from the Cincinnati Law School in 1886, and Mr. Davis got one from Washington College in 1903, but both were earned. Why they have been overlooked I don't know: no doubt the colleges will fall upon them anon, for giving degrees to Dr. Hoover is a sport that has begun to play out. The Hon. W. M. Jardine, Secretary of Agriculture, was marked as a coming man so long ago as the year 1916, when he was still an humble chief of experiment stations in Kansas. In that year the faculty of Campbell College, a Christian institution at Holton, Kansas, gave him an LL.D. In 1925, just after he had been elevated to the Cabinet, the Agricultural College of Utah gave him another. But Harvard, Yale and Princeton still overlook him.

II

The honors conferred on such eminent public servants are naturally gratifying to all 100% Americans, but what is even more pleasing and significant is the way in which the academic groves have received the patriotic labors of the Hon. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, the lady assistant Attorney-General in charge of Law Enforcement. The University of Southern California will go down into history as the first temple of learning to appreciate Mrs. Willebrandt's greatness. In 1925 it made her an LL.D. Incidentally, that was a notable year for the university. At the same ceremony it recognized three other statesmen with similar honors: the Hon. William Gibbs McAdoo, then a candidate for the Presidency; the Hon. Curtis Dwight Wilbur, the orator-admiral, and the Hon. Ignace Jan Paderewski, who had been premier of Poland for a brief but distinguished while. Last June Mrs. Willebrandt was made an LL.D. by Dickinson College, at Carlisle, Pa., where she also delivered a moral address to the graduating class.

As for Dr. Coolidge, he has been collecting LL.D.'s since his election as Governor of Massachusetts, as predecessor of the immortal Fuller. The governing board of Tufts College, always extraordinarily alert, was the first to see the signs of future eminence in him. In 1918 it made him Legum Doctor, with three cheers and a tiger. In 1919 his alma mater, Amherst, followed suit, and soon afterward Wesleyan, Williams, Bates and the University of Vermont jumped aboard the bandwagon. In 1922 the Johns Hopkins put the final stamp of greatness upon him by admitting him to its distinguished line of honorary doctors. The lamented Harding was made an LL.D. by Princeton and the Birmingham Southern College shortly before he was martyred. There is no doubt that had he lived longer he would have been similarly honored by Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Dartmouth, and the Johns Hopkins.

The names of some of the other eminent American officials who have been made doctors of laws, and of the universities and colleges which bestowed the honor upon them, follow:

The Hon. Frederick H. Gillett, formerly Speaker of the House of Representatives and now Senator from Massachusetts: Amherst.

The Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War in the Cabinet of Dr. Wilson: North Carolina, Oberlin, West Virginia, Wittenberg, Washington and Lee.

The Hon. Irvine L. Lenroot, Senator from Wisconsin: Temple.

The Hon. Elihu Root, formerly Secretary of State: Hamilton, Yale, Columbus, New York, Williams, Princeton, Harvard, Wesleyan, McGill, Union, Toronto, Colgate, California.

The Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, formerly Secretary of State: Brown, Columbus, Knox, Lafayette, Union, Colgate, George Washington, Williams, Harvard, Pennsylvania, Yale, Michigan, Dartmouth, Amherst, Princeton.

The Hon. Josephus Daniels, formerly Secretary of the Navy: Wake Forest, North Carolina, Washington and Lee.

The Hon. W. H. Taft, formerly President and now Chief Justice of the United States: Yale, Pennsylvania, Harvard, Miami, Iowa, Wesleyan, Princeton, McGill, Cincinnati, Hamilton.

The Hon. James Montgomery Beck, formerly solicitor-general of the United States: Michigan, Lafayette, Moravian College and Theological Seminary.

The Hon. David S. Houston, formerly Secretary of Agriculture: North Carolina, Missouri, Brown.

The Hon. Carter Glass, Senator from Virginia and formerly Secretary of the Treasury: North Carolina, Washington and Lee.

The Hon. Abram I. Elkus, formerly Ambassador to Turkey: Middlebury.

The Hon. Albert Sidney Burleson, Postmaster-General in the Cabinet of Dr. Wilson: Baylor.

The Hon. Harry A. Garfield, Fuel Administrator during the late war: William and Mary, Wesleyan, Amherst, Princeton, Dartmouth, Whitman.

The Hon. Frank O. Lowden, formerly Governor of Illinois: Iowa, Knox, Northwestern, Chicago, Colorado, Lafayette, William and Mary, Miami, Syracuse.

The Hon. Raymond Blaine Fosdick, formerly Under-Secretary General of the League of Nations: Colorado, Colgate.

The Hon. John W. Davis, formerly Ambassador to England and candidate for the Presidency: Dartmouth, Brown, Bucknell, Washington and Lee, West Virginia, Princeton, Union, Yale.

The Hon. Bainbridge Colby, formerly Secretary of State: St. John's, Ohio Northern, Moores Hill, Lincoln Memorial.

The Hon. James M. Cox, late candidate for the Presidency: Wittenberg.

The Hon. William P. G. Harding, Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston: Alabama, Harvard, Columbia.

The Hon. Owen D. Young, diplomat and chairman of the board of the General Electric Company: Union, Tufts, Harvard, Dartmouth, the Johns Hopkins, Colgate, Columbia, Yale.

The Hon. Nicholas Longworth, Speaker of the House of Representatives: New York.

The Hon. Alfred E. Smith, Governor of New York: Columbia.

The Hon. Henry Morgenthau, formerly Ambassador to Turkey: Oberlin, Grinnell, Temple.

Nor have the military and naval dignitaries of the nation gone unrecognized. General John Joseph Pershing leads the list. Since 1917 he has received no less than ten LL.D.'s from institutions as small as the University of Nebraska and as eminent as Yale. General Tasker H. Bliss, who helped to draw up the historic treaty of Versailles, has received only three: from Bucknell, Western Reserve and Harvard. The late General Leonard Wood had eleven: from Harvard, Williams, Pennsylvania, Princeton, the University of the South, Georgia, Michigan, Union, Wesleyan, George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. In the Navy, the learned Admiral William Snowden Sims has received six, and from universities ranging in size from Wesleyan to Columbia.

Of late there has arisen in Chicago a statesman of unusual stature. He is now only mayor of that city, but shows promise of Bigger Things. I refer, of course, to the Hon. William Hale Thompson. Through his courageous efforts the minds of the school children of Chicago are being purged of the treasonable doctrines slyly introduced by paid English propagandists into school texts on the American Revolution. He has also shown himself to be a friend of all the oppressed races—the Negroes, the Irish and the Jews. In recognition of these high services, Wilberforce University, of Xenia, O., reputed to be the oldest and largest university of color in the country, on June 16 of this year made him a doctor of laws. In conferring this degree upon him the president of the university spoke in glowing terms of his “interest in human uplift.”

III

But it is by the LL.D.'s which they have bestowed upon men eminent in the business world that the American universities have shown conclusively that they have the national honor at heart. The late Judge Elbert Henry Gary, it is agreed by all the right-thinking men, was the greatest American of his generation. The eminent philosopher, Arthur Brisbane, has recently made known his conviction that the Judge must ever remain a standard to appraise human greatness, and that the highest tribute that can be paid even to Aristotle is to say that he was “the Judge Gary of his time.” Mr. Brisbane came to this conclusion only a year or so ago, but McKendree College noticed it way back in 1906 and in the same year made the Judge a doctor of laws. Nine long years elapsed thereafter before another academic board came to acknowledge his contribution to the welfare of mankind. But then there was a veritable stampede to heap honors upon him. Lafayette College began the rush in 1915 by doing what McKendree College had done years back. In 1916 Lincoln Memorial University followed suit, in 1919 Trinity College, in 1921 Syracuse, and in 1922 Northwestern. In 1915 the University of Pittsburgh, then seeking funds, had made the Judge an Sc.D. and in 1925 New York University made him a D.C.S., whatever that may be. When he died a few months ago the Judge remembered all of these great institutions in his will.

The Hon. J. P. Morgan, the younger, for some unaccountable reason, has received only two LL.D's in this country, from Trinity College in 1918, and from his alma mater, Harvard, in 1923, and one D.C.S., from New York in 1922. No other American colleges have honored him, despite the fact that Cambridge University, in England, showed them all the way eight years ago, when it made him an LL.D. Similarly, the Hon. Charles M. Schwab has been made an LL.D. only three times: by Lincoln Memorial University, St. Francis College, at Loretto, Penna., and Franklin and Marshall College. So with Otto Hermann Kahn, the eminent patron of the arts: he is Legum Doctor of the University of Michigan, George Washington University and Lincoln Memorial University. The Hon. Dwight Whitney Morrow, recently appointed ambassador to Mexico, has been likewise honored by Williams College, Yale, the University of Pennsylvania, and Princeton. The Hon. Samuel Insull, the public utilities king of Chicago, who loves his country so much that he contributed heavily to both the Republican and the Democratic campaign funds at the last senatorial election in Illinois, has been made an LL.D. by Northwestern University and an Sc.D. by Union College.

Speaking of captains of industry, I must not forget the Hon. Edward Laurence Doheny. This is the same Mr. Doheny who had some unfortunate dealings with the Hon. Albert B. Fall, former Secretary of the Interior, regarding the lease of government oil reserves in California. The ethics of these dealings were first questioned by an investigating committee of the United States Senate, and have been recently denounced as corrupt by the Supreme Court. But such accidents do not take away from the greatness of the man. He started in life as a poor boy and gradually, by hard work, raised himself to his present high position. Moreover, he is very philanthropic. It is thus to the high credit of Loyola College, of 1901 Venice boulevard, Los Angeles, that it made him a doctor of laws on June 5, 1926. He may now be called Dr. Doheny, and may speak to Dr. Daugherty and Dr. A. Mitchell Palmer on an equal footing.

So may the celebrated Cyrus Hermann Kotzschmar Curtis, publisher of the Ladies' Home Journal, the Saturday Evening Post, the Country Gentleman, the Philadelphia Public Ledger and the New York Evening Post. The University of Pennsylvania raised him to the doctorate in 1924. The Hon. George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, is an LL.D. of Hamilton. The Hon. William Randolph Hearst, strangely enough, had to wait until May 23 of this year; then he was made a doctor of laws by Oglethorpe University, at Atlanta, Ga. He delivered the baccalaureate address on the occasion, and in it he favored the students with his views on clean journalism and world peace.

Other distinguished American journalists entitled to wear the purple robes are Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times (Kentucky); Major John S. Cohen, of the Atlanta Journal (Washington and Lee); Frederic W. Wile, formerly of the Philadelphia Public Ledger (Notre Dame); E. Lansing Ray, of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat (Washington); Dorothy Dix, the authority on love (Tulane); and Victor H. Hanson, of the Birmingham (Ala.) News (Birmingham Southern and Howard). Dr. Frank Crane is a D.D. of Nebraska Wesleyan and a Ph.B. of Wesleyan, but not an LL.D. Arthur Brisbane is still plain Arthur Brisbane. Edgar A. Guest remains unhonored. So do Milt Gross and Bugs Baer. Franklin P. Adams has no degree. Neither has Heywood Broun. Herbert Bayard Swope, of the World, is an L.H.D. of Hobart College. Walter Lippmann has two LL.D.'s, from Wake Forest and Wisconsin. Ralph Pulitzer has only an A.B. from Harvard; he yet lacks an LL.D. So does his brother Joseph, of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. But George W. Ochs-Oakes, of Current History (geb. Ochs), is a Ph.D. of Columbia. His brother Adolph S., owner of the Times, is an LL.D. of both Columbia and the University of Chattanooga, and Rollo Ogden, editor of that great paper, is an L.H.D. of Williams, his alma mater. Robert Lincoln O'Brien, editor of the celebrated Boston Herald, of heroic record in the Sacco-Vanzetti case, is a Litt.D. of both Brown and Dartmouth, but the other Boston editors seem to have escaped so far. There are no honorary doctors among the editors of Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Kansas City, Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Milwaukee or New Orleans. Edward Scott Beck, managing editor of the Chicago Tribune, "the world's greatest newspaper," is an A.B. of Michigan, but no more: he earned the degree in 1893. Roy W. Howard, of the Scripps-Howard chain of papers has no degree—as yet. The late Frank A. Munsey got an LL.D. from New York University in 1925, just in time. Edward W. Bok, once editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, has LL.D.'s from Rutgers and the inevitable Tufts, and got another from the Pope in 1907—a somewhat curious business, which the Klan might do well to investigate. Dr. Bok, had he wanted them, might have had other LL.D.'s from Smith, Wellesley, Vassar, Goucher and Bryn Mawr.

IV

The great spiritual leaders of the land have always fared well at the hands, so to speak, of the academic degree factories. In June, 1926, Washington College, at Chestertown, Md., caused a dreadful uproar in the Free State by giving an LL.D. to the Rev. Clarence True Wilson, general secretary of the Methodist Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals. Washington College, which was founded in 1723 and gave an LL.D. to George Washington in 1789, is mainly supported by the public funds of Maryland, the citizens of which, in overwhelming majority, are very wet. Thus they were staggered when they found out that their money had been used to hang gauds upon the chief wowser of the dry Methodists. But nothing came of the agitation. Three years before Washington College had given a degree to the Hon. Albert C. Ritchie, the wet Governor of the Free State. Obviously, its syndics want to have friends in both camps.

Bishop Thomas Nicholson, of Detroit, head of the Anti-Saloon League, has three LL.D.'s, from Cornell, Northwestern and Allegheny College. His colleague, Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, grand dragon of the Chicago Methodists and one of the bosses of the Methodist Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals, has four: from Maine, Boston, De Pauw, and Rochester. After him come the following divines, renowned all over the world for their theological learning: the Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, the Modernist who also believes in the Resurrection; the Right Rev. William Thomas Manning, ordinary of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of New York City, and a man of great philosophical erudition; the Rev. Cortland Myers, successor to the late William Jennings Bryan as leader of the Fundamentalists; and the Rev. Stephen Samuel Wise, the recognized prophet of the more refined variety of American Judaism.

The Rev. Dr. Fosdick has been made a doctor of laws by the Universities of Rochester and Michigan. Monsignor Manning, like the late St. Thomas Aquinas, has only one LL.D.: it came from New York University. Rabbi Wise has never received a degree from a theological seminary, and as result the more orthodox of the Jews have sometimes doubted his right to represent God on earth. But the distinguished Temple University, of Philadelphia, banished their fears in 1917, when it conferred an LL.D. on him, which is far higher than a D.D. It was only in the last years of his life that the great scholastic philosopher St. Bonaventura, was made an LL.D. by the University of Paris. The same year in which Temple University honored Dr. Wise it also honored the Rev. Cortland Myers. The Rev. John Roach Straton, the Baptist Pope, has so far failed to fetch an LL.D., though he has a D.D.

Among the prominent literati and philosophers who have been elevated to the rank of Dr. Otto Kahn and Dr. Charlie Schwab are Irvin S. Cobb, Augustus Thomas, Paul Shorey, Arthur Oncken Lovejoy and George Lyman Kittredge. Mr. Cobb, the successor of Mark Twain, was put on a footing with the late Dr. Samuel Johnson by both Dartmouth and the eminent University of Georgia. Mr. Thomas, the American Shakespeare, was made an LL.D. by the University of Missouri, and thus went the Bard of Avon one better. The champion LL.D. collector of the American literati, however, is Dr. Shorey, the venerable professor of Greek at the University of Chicago, and one of the ablest guardians of the purity of the national literature. Since 1905, when the universities of the land first became aware of his services to American belles lettres, he has received LL.D.'s from the following: Iowa, Missouri, the Johns Hopkins, Michigan, Colorado, Princeton and Pennsylvania. Professor Kittredge, the celebrated Shakespeare scholar of Harvard, got his two LL.D.'s. from the University of Chicago and Brown. Dr. Lovejoy was made an LL.D. by the University of California in 1924, probably as a reward for his heroic public services during the late war.

Dreiser, Cabell, Hergesheimer, O'Neill, Miss Cather, Masters, Sandburg, and Anderson, like Thoreau, Hawthorne, Melville, Stephen Crane and Frank Norris before them, have never received any honorary degrees, not even Litt.D.'s, but Dr. Talcott Williams, late head of the Columbia School of Journalism is an LL.D. five times, an L.H.D. three times, and an Litt.D. once. Another heavily spangled literatus is Robert Underwood Johnson, once editor of the Century. He is an honorary A.M., an honorary Ph.D., and an honorary L.H.D. But Paul Elmer More beats him with three Litt.D.'s and one LL.D., and Brander Matthews matches More with two LL.D.'s, one D.C.L. and one Litt.D. One of his LL.D.'s comes from Columbia, where he has been professing since 1892, and the other from Miami, where the realtors have laid the foundations of a modern Padua. Booth Tarkington is an Litt.D. three times: Princeton, De Pauw and Columbia. Robert Frost is an L.H.D. of Vermont and a Litt.D. of Yale. James Harvey Robinson is an LL.D. of the University of Utah, among the Mormons. Young Teddy Roosevelt, who is also an author, has an honorary M.A. from Harvard, given to him in 1919, but whether he got it for his war services, for his literary endeavors, or for his high doings as assistant Secretary of the Navy does not appear.

Zane Grey so far lacks an LL.D., but he has a D.D.S., granted to him by the University of Pennsylvania in 1896.

V

Of American institutions of the higher learning, the most lavish with its LL.D.'s is Notre Dame. In 1917 alone it conferred twenty-seven. That year ought to stand out as a purple one in its history, for one of those whom it made an LL.D. then was Judge Ben B. Lindsey, of Denver, who has since let loose some appalling ideas about holy marriage. What makes the incident most mortifying to the more sensitive alumni is the fact that on the very same occasion the Rev. John A. Ryan, the learned apologist of the Catholic University, was also made an LL.D.,—and Father Ryan is one of the church's staunchest defenders of until-death-do-us-part connubial bliss. Very likely Father Ryan and Judge Lindsey conversed at the time, and perhaps even shook hands. Notre Dame's liberality with its degrees extends to worthies quite unknown to the general public. Some time ago it gave an LL.D. to one James Eli Watson. Can it be that this was the celebrated Jim Watson, Senator from Indiana and lately the darling of the Klan?

As to which university has honored more and better known public servants than all the others, it is very difficult to say, they have all done so well. Consider the case of Harvard. It has an excellent record. It has never given Clarence Darrow or Oswald Garrison Villard an LL.D., but it has bestowed them on such eminent men as the following: President John Grier Hibben of Princeton, Secretary Hoover, General Joffre, the Earl of Reading, King Albert of Belgium, General Enoch H. Crowder, Admiral Sims, former Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, J. Pierpont Morgan, Owen D. Young, Secretary Mellon and George F. Baker. Yale's list is just as good. You will find General Pershing on it, and Admiral Sims, General Foch, Owen D. Young and nearly all the others that Harvard has honored. The Princeton roll of honor is even better. It was the only one of the big three to give the martyred President Harding an LL.D.: that was in 1922. Again, it has made doctors of laws of more foreign notables than Harvard and Yale put together. In 1917 alone—the same year in which Notre Dame made its remarkable record—it gave an LL.D. to each of the following: Viscount Alte, Minister from Portugal; Baron Emil de Cartier de Marchienne, Belgian Ambassador; Aimaro Sato, Japanese Ambassador; Viscount Vincenzo Maccichi di Cellere, Italian Ambassador; Sir Cecil Arthur Spring-Rice, British Ambassador, and Jean Adrien Antoine Jules Jusserand, French Ambassador. Further, in 1925, it gave Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania, an LL.D. and also Dwight W. Morrow, and in 1926 it bestowed the same honor upon the Crown Prince of Sweden.

The list of Columbia's LL.D.'s is highly dignified. It includes the late M. René Viviani, Earl Balfour, former Secretary of State Robert Lansing, and the Most Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, Lord Archbishop of York and Primate of England. Nor has New York University anything to be ashamed of in the men it has chosen to honor. It was the only university in the country thus to mark the lamented Frank A. Munsey, and it is also the only one to recognize Speaker Longworth and Bishop Manning. What is even more to its credit, it was the only one to bestow an LL.D. on the celebrated Prince Valdemar of Denmark. Chancellor Elmer Ellsworth Brown can recognize a truly great man just as well as President Angell of Yale or President Lowell of Harvard.

The records of the small universities, though not as brilliant as those of the big ones, are creditable just the same. Brown, for example, honored the late Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, and has given degrees to General Crowder and the other standard heroes of Harvard, Yale and Princeton—Foch, Diaz, etc. Washington and Lee, of Lexington, Va., though situated in the backwoods, has kept itself abreast of world events and its choices for honorary LL.D.'s would do credit to Harvard, the ever alert Tufts, or even New York University. Some of the great ones whom it has honored are the Hon. Newton D. Baker, Senator Carter Glass, Major John S. Cohen and Judge John Barton Payne. Franklin and Marshall College, located in the town of Lancaster, Pa., has handed out its LL.D.'s mainly to local dignitaries, but when it does decide to honor a man of national fame it strikes a homer. In 1924 it made an LL.D. of the Hon. Charlie Schwab. The University of Arizona may be a small institution, but it has able and learned minds directing it. Like most other small colleges it gives most of its honorary LL.D.'s to local notables, but like them, too, it knows who's who when it looks around for a man of wider renown to honor. Thus it made an LL.D. of General Pershing in 1919, just after his triumphant return from abroad.

But a study of the records indicates that many American institutions of learning, when it comes to handing out their honorary degrees, do not always think solely of the eminence of the man honored: sometimes they also give a sly thought, it would appear, to his stimulating state of solvency—and to their own needs. The University of Pittsburgh, it has been whispered, is not above giving consideration to such delicate matters. Nor, indeed, are such great institutions as Harvard, Yale, Princeton and the Johns Hopkins. If Owen D. Young were a bankrupt it is highly improbable that his public services would get him so many LL.D.'s as he is now fetching. As for the gentlemen of Wall Street, they appear to be honored in direct proportion to their liberality. Harvard gave George F. Baker an LL.D. in 1926 directly after he had coughed up millions for its new School of Business Administration, and J. P. Morgan got his in 1923 just as its drive for a $15,000,000 endowment was drawing to a close. Mr. Morgan, it is very probable, made good, though the exact amount he contributed is not known. If either of the Rockefellers craved LL.D.'s, they could have them by the bushel. But so far they have been shy.

Sometimes hopeful boards of trustees come to grief. In 1917, for example, a college in Iowa conferred an LL.D. on a rich Los Angeles oil man. "The board gave it to him," said a member of the faculty later on, "because it expected that he would give the money to endow a new department of oil engineering. But after he had got the degree he failed to endow the department, to the great discomfiture of the trustees." Goucher College, in Baltimore, once made an even more lamentable miscalculation. Its chief benefactor, for years, had been a Methodist parson, the Rev. John F. Goucher, D.D., LL.D., who had married a rich widow and was thus very well heeled. In his old age, obviously with his will in mind, the trustees changed the name of the institution from the Woman's College of Baltimore, which it had borne since 1844, to Goucher College. But when Dr. Goucher died his money went elsewhere.

NOW WE GOT PROBEESH

BY CHESTER T. CROWELL

WE WERE in a club, my host and I, a very excellent club. He had ordered a special lunch because both of us like Italian food. In the kitchen and dining-rooms of that club Italians preside and they receive such orders with pride and pleasure.

"Let's go upstairs to the nineteenth hole and get a cocktail while we are waiting," said my host.

"No, no!" exclaimed the commander of the dining-room with a gesture that offered apology for his presumption. "Excuse," he added. "The bar is closed."

"Yes? When did that misfortune overtake us?" Prohibition was then about six and a half years old.

"Yesterday, Signor. It is because now we got Probeesh." I was charmed. Quite evidently this man had just heard news and was eager to share it. His sincerity delighted me. I encouraged him to go on.

All Italians have histrionic ability; this one, being handsome, seemed endowed far beyond the usual. He assumed a certain stance familiar to everyone who has heard grand opera and then proceeded: "It is a law which says no more bar. It is the Constitution of the country. So the bar is close. If you want anything to drink you must be served here in the dining-room. What would you like?"

We ordered cocktails. While we sipped them I watched this Italian hastening, fluttering, and smiling through his mid-day task. He liked to explain about Prohibition. "It is the law," he would say with such dignity that the lines seemed to belong to the high priest in "Aida." This man is a patriot and inordinately proud of his son's record as an American soldier in the World War. He listens with rapt attention, indeed almost with awe, to the conversations that his excellent cocktails, lunches and dinners promote. On all subjects he is rigidly conservative. The National Security League might embrace him as a brother; the United States Chamber of Commerce would be charmed with him; as to religion he is also orthodox, hazy and non-participating, which is the sine qua non of "class" as he has observed it. Grand Masters, Chief Moguls, and Lofty Gad-zookuses impress him tremendously and he recognizes the insignia of their orders. Briefly he is safe, sane, and regular on all subjects and not the least of these is Law Enforcement. The bar is closed. If you wish a drink you must be served in the dining-room—because "Now we got Probeesh."

II

We were at lunch in an Italian restaurant, several business men and I. The business men are importers of olive oil, cheese and other Italian products. They were having great sport with the proprietor because he had often boasted that a high-class place such as his would never be raided and yet it had been raided the day before. He serves only one meal a day—lunch.

"But, just the same, I had my joke on them," said the proprietor. "Yes, I had my joke and they looked sick, I can tell you."

Suddenly it occurred to him that the story of his joke required a prologue if I were to understand it, so he furnished the prologue.

"When I came to this country I was a sculptor's helper and an artist. A rotten artist. Pretty soon I had to go to work for someone beside sculptors because I found only two and they didn't need me. Well, I went to work on the subway; they were building a subway; that was the only place I could find where everyone spoke Italian.

"Yesterday, when I was raided, they said 'Call a taxi and we will take you to the station.' I said: 'No! No taxi. We will go on the subway. I want to go on the subway because I built that subway. I built it on good vino and garlic and good bread and more vino. All of us who built that subway built it on vino. Now, if I must go to jail because we got Probeerish in this country I will ride in that subway that I built on good vino. Andiamo! Forward march!' And we went by the subway. Believe me, they looked sick!"

I doubt that they really looked sick, but it was none the less a glorious gesture. To insinuate, however, that the persons who conduct Prohibition raids would catch even the faintest glimmer of that gesture somewhat strains my credulity.

III

We were in an Italian restaurant, my guest and I. This restaurant calls itself a garden because of a yellowish, malarial vine that straggles over a dusty trellis, trying feebly to peep out from under the awning that protects the customers and get some sunlight. I have seen hookworm sufferers who looked exactly like that vine.

"Needa rain," remarked the proprietor.

"No," I objected, "it needs sunshine."

"I not talking about da vine," he explained.

"What, then?"

"Da vino."

"Does the vino need rain?" I know nothing about the mysteries of wine making.

"Needa rain to get in da vino," he went on.

"Yes? How so?"

"Always da vino cee deliver in da rain."

"Well, well, why is that?"

"I duno. Vincenzo, he no like to deliver cef no rain."

"Maybe he is afraid of being caught," I suggested.

"No, no; cee all right. I no sell da vino; joosta serve wit' da dinner. That no against da law. Theesa restaurant. No speakeasy. Strictly da law here, all time."

"But Vincenzo won't deliver your wine unless it is raining, eh?"

"Thatsa right. Someone tell Vincenzo, he say, 'Vincenzo, you take a care; no roll dat barrel 'cross sidewalk and bump ten tousan peoples; you wait till rain.' So Vincenzo wait. I got joosta four gallon left. But what he care? Eesa bullhead, dat Vincenzo!"

He looked upward dolefully and walked away muttering, "Needa rain."

IV

I was in an Italian restaurant alone. The proprietor was delighted to see me unaccompanied because he wanted to talk to me. Plainly he was worried. I speak Italian, or rather I take a shot at it. Sometimes I understand it as well as English; more frequently I don't. It depends upon the Italian: there are fifty-seven varieties. This restaurateur is from Genoa, so his Italian is much mixed with French, but we managed to break through the barriers, at least to some extent.

"I want to ask your advice," he said. "There are two Prohibition agents who have been coming in here from time to time ever since I have been in business. Usually they bring women with them and order dinner and a bottle of wine. They never pay. That does not seem right to me because I do not violate the law here. I do not sell wine nor buy wine. I make my own wine and it is good, honest wine. I serve it only with meals. Wine is all I have and no drinks are for sale. Just the same those men have been coming here in that way for a long time. My business is small and that is a heavy tax, but I let it go; I said nothing; it is better not to make them mad.

"Well, a few days ago they came in here very drunk and ordered dinner. My guests looked at them and looked at me and wondered why I didn't put them out. You know we never have anything like that around here. It is very bad for business. I have more women customers than men here, and they don't like that. But what could I do? When they had had their dinner they came to me and said they wanted twenty-five dollars. I told them that I did not have twenty-five dollars and that was the truth. They said they did not believe it. I opened the cash register and showed them. I had only about eighteen dollars. They took that. Yes, they not only took it but they told me they would come back later on and get the other seven dollars. Well, they didn't come back and I was happy for that, so I closed up in the evening and went home. But just before I closed up I thought to myself, 'Now they might come back, and if they do I will have just ten dollars in the cash register.' So I fixed it that way and then I locked up and went home. This morning, when I came to open the restaurant, I found the door broken all to pieces. The cash register was also smashed all to pieces. I had locked it so they broke it open by dropping it on the floor and hammering it with chairs. Exactly seven dollars gone. The other three were there. So I think I know who did that burglary. I went to a lawyer and told him about it. I asked him: 'What can we do about such a thing? Is it not right that a citizen should make a complaint when such a thing happens? Is it not my duty?' And he said no. He said I can do nothing. What do you say?"

I explained why his lawyer had advised him as he did.

V

We were in an Italian restaurant, about twelve young men and I. We had gathered to sing, rather than to eat. One of the boys was a stranger to me. I acknowledged the introduction in Italian, but he spoke English, slowly putting the words together as a very small child labors with building blocks. His enunciation, however, was almost without accent.

"I am a citizen of Rome," he said, "and in Italy I am a lawyer. I left Italy for honorable reasons, but I have not yet learned English very well and in this country I am a maker of fine sausages."

This matter being cleared up we proceeded to eat, and then to sing. Presently wine was ordered.

"No," objected the citizen of Rome and maker of fine sausages. "In this country we have Prohibition. We will buy no wine. You come to my room and I will give you wine that I made myself. It is better than this, anyway. This Prohibition wine is horrible."

VI

I was in an Italian restaurant, alone. The proprietor is blond, fat, placid and suggests a German baker rather than a native of Milano. As I ate he strode back and forth, flipping a napkin nervously, mopping his brow, lighting his cigar and immediately letting it go out again. Never before had I seen him behave in such a manner.

"Anything wrong?" I asked.

"Trooble," was the prompt reply. "Lots trooble."

"What kind of trouble?"

He squared off in that characteristically Italian manner as though he were going to sing the principal tenor solo in an opera, brought his hands up as if to direct the orchestra and told his story.

"Comes in here a man. I say to him, 'Hello, what can I do for you?' He take his coat like so [indicating the lapel] and turn it back like so. A badge! He say 'I am Enforcement.' I say 'All right, Enforcement, what can I do for you? You like to eat? You will have a drink?' But no, he will not eat; he will not drink. 'Then you want fifty dollar,' I say. 'All right, Enforcement, here is your fifty dollar.' Business is rotten but what can you do? Enforcement must have his fifty dollar if he say so. But imagine! This Enforcement will not take the fifty dollar! He will not eat, he will not drink, he will not take the fifty dollar! He is crazy. 'Then what do you want?' I ask. And he say, 'You are arrest.' Oh, hell! Then I have to go and see my lawyer, and he have to go and see this man and that man and this man and that man, and all the time I am running around here and there and in the place we got not enough help anyway. Take the whole day with this foolishness and it cost me one hundred twenty-five dollars. Ees a damn crook, that Enforcement. I hope I never see him again."

"Are you still in trouble?"

"No, everything is fix. But I am tired. And that sauce I put on your spaghetti is terrible. Excuse, please."

VII

We were in an Italian restaurant, my guest and I. The proprietor's aged father, sitting in the kitchen, was directly in my line of vision and from time to time I glanced at him because he has a remarkable head that reminds me of old Roman coins. At a little table nearby the proprietor's daughter, aged possibly five or six, was eating spaghetti. Her grandfather's gaze never once wandered from that table. He adores the child.

Presently a waiter stopped at her little table and filled her glass with water. Immediately grandfather was on his feet and hastening to her. In his hand he carried a small bottle of red Italian wine. He poured about a tablespoonful into her glass of water. She looked up to smile her thanks. His eyes caressed her and aged fingers touched her hair. She is the light of his old age and not for the world would he have her poisoned by impure water! A little dash of wine and all the germs are killed. He is taking care of her as he would if the family still lived in the province of Liguria, where he and his ancestors were born. Here, however, his act not only violates the law but outrages the current morals. He is teaching a mere infant to drink an intoxicating beverage, which will darken and shorten her life, as he certainly ought to know, being 78 himself and of sound mind.

VIII

I was in an Italian restaurant, a very plain one. Baked chicken with vegetables, forty cents; half a gallon of marvelous spaghetti, twenty cents. Endurable wine, fifteen cents a glass. However, most of the customers drink near-beer. Oddly enough they seem to like it, perhaps because it costs only ten cents a pint. These customers are thrifty laboring men who consider values at some length before parting with a nickel.

About forty were assembled for the mid-day meal when I came in. Almost immediately behind me came two Prohibition enforcement officers. They sniffed some of the glasses on the tables, then disclosed their mission to the proprietor, requesting him to conduct them into the cellar. There they found a barrel of wine and informed him that they would send a truck for it right away. Then they went out. Immediately the proprietor leaped for the telephone to warn all of the neighboring restaurateurs that wolves were prowling. At the same time the chief cook emerged from the kitchen, waving his hairy, tattooed arms and speaking volubly. Eloquence poured from his gorilla chest, which was draped in a flimsy cotton undershirt and nothing more.

Seldom have I witnessed such immediate results from oratory. Every customer leaped to his feet and volunteered to man a bucket, a tea-kettle, a stew pan, a cauldron, or whatever the kitchen afforded. Like the boarding party of a man-o'-war they scampered down the dark, narrow steps into the cellar, each carrying something that would hold wine. Then up they came, walking as fast as they dared. The cook directed traffic out into a corridor, then up a stairway. What happened up there I do not know. Perhaps empty barrels were available in the living quarters aloft. At the time, it occurred to me that bath tubs might be pressed into service. Anyway, three minutes at the outside sufficed to remove the wine and return all of the kitchen utensils to their proper places. The customers sat down again. When the enforcement agents returned to the restaurant all was quiet, or rather as quiet as one may expect when forty laboring men are eating.

The enforcement agents and their assistants went into the cellar, followed by the proprietor. Just what aroused their suspicions I do not know; perhaps some of the wine had been spilled on the floor; anyway the enforcement agents tested the barrel and found that it contained only hydrant water. Then something else happened down there; something that I didn't see, but when the proprietor came up his face was very red and swollen, so that he was a ridiculous caricature of his former self. Later he remarked that two men held him and another slapped his face.

"They should not do that," he said.

"We are all here and we have got to live. We might just as easily live in peace with each other. [He was speaking not of all humanity, but of enforcement agents and wine sellers.] In this life one hand has got to wash the other. It was foolish to slap me because that wine turned into water. Here in this place we are just cooks and hard-working poor people. If we get slapped then we must be slapped; worse things could happen, so I shrug my shoulders and forget it. But Enforcement will find that he has other kinds of men to meet in his business and he can't go on forever this way slapping people. Some of them will get mad. He is very foolish. All of us have got to live. If he does not change his ways some day he may get hurt."

Six months later I was informed that the enforcement agent in question had been killed. Not knowing his name, and by that time having forgotten his appearance I could not have verified the information even if I had been of a mind to do so.

"Too bad," was the proprietor's comment. "We could just as easily live in peace together. But thus it goes now that we got Probeesh."

AN AMERICAN MASTER

BY THOMAS CRAVEN

As a boy, standing before my easel with its square of stretched canvas, I realized that I had in my possession the wherewith to create a masterpiece that would live throughout the coming ages. The great masters had no more.—Albert Pinkham Ryder.

ON THE western shore of a fair harbor looking down into Buzzard's Bay lies the city of New Bedford. Today it is a poor sort of place, a New England mill town with foundries and textile factories in which sullen youths, prematurely old, and hard, horse-faced girls, hammer and spin to uphold the material position of the tenacious remnants of Massachusetts' culture. At night the mill hands swarm the streets hunting for sensual excitement to relieve their pinched-in souls, and the survivors of the old aristocracy are driven into the gloomy seclusion of their distant Georgian abodes. The picturesque waterfront serves no maritime purpose, and the fair harbor is empty of craft, save the ancient New York boat, the Martha's Vineyard packet, and an occasional barge or coastwise schooner. As a symbol of its former glory the city maintains at one of its deserted wharves an authentic whaler, fully equipped and captained by George Fred Tilton, the last of the buccancers. Captain Tilton, a great bull of a man, powerful for all his years, with enormous hands, a massive head, and a booming laugh that can be heard as far as Nantucket, is already a legendary hero. Beside being the most fearless whaling skipper who ever sailed out of New Bedford, he is reputed to have walked 1000 miles in the Far North to obtain relief for shipwrecked companions, to have broken Joe Chynski's jaw in a fight over a girl in a San Francisco dance-hall, and, during the late war, to have served his country as commander of a barge engaged in the pleasant business of carrying high explosives to and from various points near New York City.

In the year 1847, three important events occurred in New Bedford. The town, numbering within its limits more than 15,000 inhabitants, was incorporated under the laws of the Commonwealth as a full-fledged city; ships were dispatched for the first time into the Arctic zone, and the city, by increasing the field of operation, became the greatest whaling port in the world; and on March 19 Albert Pinkham Ryder was born. A few years before this date, in another Massachusetts town, James A. McNeil L. Whistler was born. Whistler, however, repudiated his birthplace and lied about his unromantic origin to the end of his days. He preferred to come into the world by way of St. Petersburg, and forsook America. To justify his homeless cosmopolitanism, he denied the existence of a national art on the same ground that one refuses to believe in a national mathematics, and he was at particular pains to assert, with the borrowed accent of European authority, that the uncivilized Yankees had never produced an object, which, properly speaking, could be called beautiful. While Whistler was barking his brilliant sophistries at London snobs, and parading up and down Paris in a fashion which led Degas to remark that he was, "genius or no genius, the most ridiculous ass alive," Ryder was living in a little room in New York, unostentatiously and with infinite patience bringing to perfection the most original painting in the annals of American art. The happiest philosopher who ever lifted a brush, he accepted life as he found it, and made no effort to reform, astonish or conquer the world.

Ryder was descended from a long line of Cape Cod folk—mechanics, shopkeepers and seafaring men. His ancestors were typical Yankees, taciturn, narrow-minded, God-fearing and undistinguished. His father, a petty customs-house official and fuel dealer, belonged to an offshoot of Wesleyan zealots who dressed and behaved like Quakers. Pinkie, as he was nicknamed, was the youngest of four sons, and inherited a large measure of traditional piety, but, oddly enough, a piety blended with remarkable tolerance and amiability. Two of his brothers followed the sea, and the third journeyed to New York and opened a small hotel which, through shrewd management, soon developed into a moderately profitable business. Pinkie Ryder, destitute of practical ambitions, succumbed to the cheerless routine of the New Bedford grammar school, but his academic education was suddenly curtailed by a severe case of vaccine poisoning. The illness weakened his eyes and troubled him throughout the rest of his life. Much has been made of this affliction, certain writers having alleged that his predilection for moonlight scenes and allegorical fantasies was the result of his early disability. This, I think, is entirely erroneous; the technical excellence of Ryder's canvases, his fine sense of balance, and his accuracy in ascertaining minutely correct color values, are sufficient evidence of a keen and unimpaired vision.

II

At an early age, this large-framed, smiling, silent youngster began to draw. There is nothing unusual in the fact. Most children have an aptitude for picture-making, and draw astonishingly well until crushed by pedants or put to work by close-fisted parents. Ryder, fortunately, suffered neither of these cruelties. Though docile and un-aggressive, he was, in his own way, as independent and detached as Thoreau. He believed that he had a great work to perform, and he approached the task with genuine religious fervor, with the same passionate faith which, in a violent and ungovernable form, sent Vincent Van Gogh to the madhouse. There was more than a spoor of New England transcendentalism in Albert Ryder, but his spiritual struggles were regulated by good sense and humanized by happy contacts with the realities of life.

The elder Ryder was completely baffled, but to his credit, acquiesced in his son's queer proceedings. When informed by an artist that Pinkie possessed a unique talent, he exclaimed, "I don't know. I'm glad if you think so. I don't understand him!" In the studio of a local painter named Sherman, young Ryder was chained to the fatuous job of copying poor engravings of the Old Masters. After a little while, without fuss or demonstration, he quietly threw them aside, and pursued his own course, painting from nature and experimenting with color. "As I worked," he later wrote, "I saw that it was good and clean and strong. I saw nature springing to life upon my dead canvas. It was better than nature, for it was vibrating with the thrill of a new creation."

In the studio of his first teacher he came under an influence that unmistakably helped him to discover the true direction of his gifts: he was introduced to the work of Albert Bierstadt, a popular painter of the day who looked at American landscape through the eyes of Hobbema and the Düsseldorf school. I should hate to be accused of trumping up a resemblance between Ryder's mature pictures and Bierstadt's fulsome conceptions. With the possible exception of Thomas Moran, Bierstadt is the worst of all the lifeless post-Colonial nondescripts represented in the Metropolitan Museum. But to a boy who had seen no original paintings of any description before, those huge theatricalities must have been vastly romantic and impressive. He did not imitate them—Ryder did less imitating than any painter I know of; he studied them, puzzling his head over the towering crags and misty waters, which, to his inexperienced eye, bespoke the grandeurs of nature, and trying to analyze the glimmering light effects which, as he subsequently found out, were but sentimental dilutions of Rembrandt's methods. Just as Ossian, the Celtic impostor, cast his weird spell on a host of English bards, so did this Bierstadt inspire the devout Yankee to test his powers on the abundant material surrounding him.

Ryder's attitude toward life was fixed at an age when most boys are irresponsible savages. He was not, as has been frequently asserted, a timorous solitary, indifferent to the ordinary affairs of the world. It is true that he was alone the greater part of the time, but his work demanded it. Most painters, differing little from carpenters and plumbers, have no difficulty in plying their mechanical trade in public places or in the presence of chattering visitors, whereas Ryder must needs work in secret, bestowing upon a single small canvas months and even years of toil and concentration. Crowds amused him, and he was fond of wandering about unaccompanied, reflecting on the curious antics and habits of his fellow men. But in the main he was a non-participant, refusing to get excited over the general run of frivolous events.

Above all he loved the sea—the majesty and terror of the Atlantic—the procession of whalers that rode proudly into the harbor. The sea was in his blood. New Bedford was a tough and exciting town, the rendezvous of smugglers and the pleasure ground of hundreds of sailors who affectionately called it the bawdy house of America. Ryder observed the swaggering effrontery of these reckless fellows, some of whom were his kinsmen; they made a great show of themselves and bragged gloriously of their bravery to their hired wenches. The young artist noted the fact and smiled. He watched the ships put out to sea and months later awaited their return. Some of them never came back. He noted that fact too, but found it a little difficult to smile. He was constantly haunted by the terror of the waves, by the mystery of the cradle endlessly rocking. Again and again he painted the sea—in "The Flying Dutchman," "The Smuggler," "Pirate's Isle," "The Wreck," "Jonah and the Whale," "The Lorelei,"—but always in its tragic moods, always to emphasize the pitiable insignificance of man. Sometimes, in a more poetic vein, he created a fabulous drama of sinister waters, opaque as slate and crossed with wan lights, but even here one catches in the small, sketchy figures the inescapable cry of human anguish. However symbolical the sea became with him, however deeply he strove to make it the emblem of the mysterious forces of life, he invariably painted it as a hard reality, as the destructive agency that had awed and fascinated him as a boy in New Bedford.

In his native town Ryder was perfectly content. At his feet lay the subject-matter that interested him most, and he was slowly learning to set down his experiences in intelligible form. But his father's business dwindled away, and the family sadly departed for New York as a final stand against poverty. The painter was then in his early twenties, without means of support and not in the least perturbed by his parasitic circumstances. Few painters have possessed the iron conviction of this Yankee visionary, and few, if any, have borne themselves with such quiet dignity and fine masculine honor. For more than ten years he was entirely dependent on his brother, resolved to have his say as an artist rather than follow a trade after the best traditions of New England.

First he studied with a painter named Marshall, from whom he seems to have learned nothing at all. Disgusted with his teacher's incessant prattle about the neo-classical art of Nineteenth Century France he enrolled in the classes of the National Academy in January, 1871. Hereupon, the tranquillity, for the first time, gave way to torturing despair. He was compelled to stifle his dreams, to forget his ships, the storm clouds and the turbulent sea, and to apply himself to the incredibly absurd process of drawing dusty casts of Jupiter and the Graces. One evening, in his dejection, he tramped through Canal street and thence toward South street, at that date one of the busiest thoroughfares on the waterfront. Approaching the wharves, he was confronted suddenly with the rigging of scores of ships—the sailing vessels that he loved most—and his eyes followed the masts and spars outlined against the sky. From that moment he was a free man again. He never went back to the poisonous atmosphere of the Academy.

As an exhibitor he was affiliated with the National Academy for many years. It was practically the only channel through which pictures could reach the public then, and Ryder was not, as has been commonly supposed, averse to recognition. A man does not devote himself to incessant creative industry merely to please his own fancy. In 1873 his first canvas was accepted and hung. It was not a good picture; he was consciously emulating the authorized romanticism of the leaders of the American school, and, like every original voice temporarily sidetracked into conventional issues, could not compete with cleverness and virtuosity. During the next fifteen years he was an annual exhibitor, sending some of his most distinguished work and receiving in return little intelligent response.

Contemporary critics set him down as inferior to the maundering Blakelock, and informed him that he had no imagination, that "he painted marines without knowing the sea, and landscapes without observing the facts of nature." This against a man who had lived in perpetual contact with the sea, and in whose landscapes one may discern not only the general characteristics of the New England scene—sheepfolds, bits of Georgian architecture, dunes with beach plums and stunted oaks—but also specific localities such as the Gay Head cliffs! In 1902 he was voted an associate academician, and in 1906 a member in full standing, the second honor carrying the dubious tribute of a portrait study executed by J. Alden Weir. Save for his occasional contributions to a dissenting organization known as the Society of American Artists, there is nothing more to be said of his official career.

III

The striking individuality of Ryder's genius—variously labelled lyrical, romantic, musical, poetic and supernatural—has inveigled critics into an insupportable error of judgment. This amazing Yankee, so substantially rooted to his native soil, so obviously in line with the development of American art, has been uniformly regarded as an isolated phenomenon—in plain words, as a freak. Even so wise a critic as Roger Fry has declared that Ryder is a spiritual brother of Schubert, Coleridge and Shelley, independent of tradition, and belonging to no age or place. As concerns Mr. Fry, we must remember that he is an Englishman and that the English are inclined to regard artistic ability in America as something essentially freakish. Furthermore, in his deep admiration for the formal qualities of Ryder's work, he has neglected to consider the man in relation to the civilization that produced him.

Ryder arrived in New York shortly after the close of the Civil War. The country was groaning with moral pains and economic fits. The financial panic of '69 wrought havoc everywhere: the provinces were prostrated and the cities were demoralized by riots and suffering. The reconstructionists refused to face the situation realistically, and the people were duped by the panaceas of romantic hypocrites, shysters and prophets. In literature the Puritans were still in the ascendancy—Whittier, the rustic ballad-maker; Longfellow, the scrupulous troubadour; the introspective Hawthorne; the platitudinous Bryant and the transcendental Emerson. To this group we must add a rising horde of drivelling fictionists bred by the war and extolling its chivalric glories. In painting there was an analogous condition. The French romantic movement, of which Delacroix was the fiery avatar, spread to the New World, where it was impregnated with parables, sweet sentiments and uplifting anecdotes. In America the revolt dissolved into two factions, though the divisional line was never sharply drawn. On the one hand were figure painters such as Chase, Duveneck, Thayer and Blashfield, all of whom compromised between Delacroix and the leaders of the academic schools of Paris and Munich; on the other were Innes, Tryon, Wyant, Daingerfield, Blakelock, Hunt and Martin, all disciples of Corot, Millet, Rousseau and the Barbizon painters.

Ryder naturally was more at home in the second group. He was not a figure painter, and he found in the transplanted Barbizon school an approach to nature identical, to a certain extent, with his own. He was a groping student, largely self-taught, and from his carefully trained associates he gathered confidence and a number of technical hints which facilitated the solution of his problems. In a brief time he had taken all they could give him, and henceforth he stood alone. Looking back on his earlier New York pictures, he subsequently said, "I cannot but feel that I have gone a little higher up the mountain and can see other peaks showing along the horizon."

As I have said, he was not a miraculous figure untouched by the drift of American art, but his resemblance to his contemporaries must not be pushed too far. Most of his canvases are very small, and when surrounded by the pretentious rubbish of the period, their beauty is not immediately apparent. To the casual spectator he resembles Wyant, Tryon, Blakelock and Daingerfield, but the similarity is all on the surface. The difference is enormous. Ryder presents a first hand commentary on life. He does not paint a scene for its own sake—to show the effect of moonlight on water, or sunlight bathing golden fields; he selects from his store of experiences one that is communicable in terms of his medium; he reduces his favorite forms to the barest essentials, throwing out everything that might encumber his meaning, and puts them together in a design that is, considering his limited range, extraordinarily dramatic. The others are only inarticulate dreamers. They paint solemn nightmares which fill us with the same sort of nausea that is churned up by Poe at his worst; their experiences are shadowy and indefinite, and their vaporous conceptions are derived from bookish lore and the conscience-stricken Barbizons. "What avails the storm cloud accurate in form and color, if the storm is not therein?" This was Ryder's poetic way of asking why painters should go to such lengths to reproduce the details of objects when they have nothing to say.

New York afforded Ryder all that his soul desired. "A rain-tight roof, frugal living, a box of colors, and God's sunlight through clear windows keep the soul attuned and the body vigorous for one's daily work." Thus did he state his credo, and thus did he answer those who advised him to travel. From the day of his arrival till his death in 1917, except for a flying visit to New Bedford, he seems to have left the city but twice, his singular attachment reminding us of Blake's devotion to London. His first venture was a voyage to England as a guest of his friend Captain Robinson, from whose account we learn that the artist spent most of his time studying clouds, or trying to paint while stretched out on the floor of his cabin. In the Summer of 1893, he travelled through Europe with the sculptor Olin Warner, but the Continent made little impression upon him, and he was glad to return. His curious insusceptibility to European art must not be misconstrued. He did not, like Mark Twain, snigger before masterpieces he could not understand; with his fund of good sense, he perceived the futility of imitating others, and that if he were to do anything worth remembering, he must invest his conceptions with the tang, the salt and the color of his own people. He must paint from his own experiences and in his own way. Except for the remote and indirect contacts which I have already mentioned, he was immune to foreign influences.

IV

Ryder's life was devoid of excesses and external adventures. His best work was done between the years 1875 and 1898 in an attic room in Fifteenth street. Here, in a strong south light, amid dirt and disorder relieved only by his pictures and a cast of a beautiful Greek head, he grappled with his imaginings. At rare intervals—mainly because it took him an unconscionably long time to finish anything—he sold a canvas, and his income therefrom was sufficient for his meager wants. In one unlucky hour of prosperity, he moved to better quarters in Washington Square, but he could not accommodate himself to anything savoring of luxury, and returned to his old nook. Sumptuous studios, he said, were for business men who turned out pot-boilers, and "upon the pot-boiler is inscribed the epitaph of art." On this point he later added, "I have two windows in my workshop that look out upon an old garden whose great trees thrust their green-laden branches over the casement sills, filtering a network of light and shadow on the bare boards of my floor. Beyond the low roof tops of neighboring houses, sweeps the eternal firmament with its ever-changing panorama of mystery and beauty. I would not exchange these two windows for a palace with less a vision than the old garden and its whispering leafage."

Ryder's painting garb was a sailor's blouse and overalls, but on the street he was a correctly groomed gentleman of the old school, with a silk hat, a frock coat and a gold-headed cane. His habits were as simple and almost as regular as those of Immanuel Kant. At the close of his day's work he used to go down to the Battery to study the ships, sometimes sketching the harbor and its craft from the decks of vessels under the command of his friends; at nightfall he would walk back to his room, cook his dinner, and read or work again. He was fond of music and occasionally attended concerts alone. He loved to "soak in the moonlight" as he said, and on clear nights would walk for hours in the parks or the Jersey woods. On his excursions into lower Manhattan he strolled through some of the vilest parts of the city—the Bowery in those days was gang-ridden and really dangerous—, but he was never molested. "People aren't so bad as they are supposed to be," he remarked. I daresay his venerable appearance was disarming. According to Frederic Fairchild Sherman, "he looked like one of the old apostles, . . . a great, rugged, bearded figure, with nobly symmetrical features, radiating kindness and peace." The extant portraits of Ryder confirm this description. He seems never to have been in love, although there is a story to the effect that he was enchanted by the playing of a woman fiddler who lived next door to him in Washington Square, and that he proposed to her on very short acquaintance and was rejected. During the last decade of his life he was incapable of original work, and devoted himself to finishing or repainting old conceptions. In 1915, after a severe illness, he was taken to Elmhurst, Long Island, where he lingered on for two years more under the care of friends.

It is consistent with the limited scope of Ryder's genius that he should not have been greatly productive, that is to say, in the manner of Rembrandt and Daumier, whose inexhaustible creative vigor was stimulated by an enormous variety of experiences. His contribution to American art consists of less than 150 small pictures. He painted exclusively in oils and carefully destroyed all sketches, studies and preliminary drawings in black-and-white, a fact which has caused many doleful out-cries among critics and dilettantes who cherish the silly notion that "an artist's true character is revealed by his sketches and unfinished drawings." It is precisely the completion of Ryder's work, the perfect realization of his ideas, that converts the encrustation of pigments on a piece of linen measuring fifteen by twenty inches into a living reality, a work of extraordinary size and grandeur. To achieve this end he kept his pictures by him for years, correcting them, altering the design, and refining his conceptions to the last degree. Unfortunately, owing to his unorthodox methods, many of his canvases are in bad condition. He used inferior pigments and cheap varnishes, and, worst of all, he would deposit thick patches of color upon a ground that was not thoroughly dry, and the unequal contraction of the two layers has resulted in cracks and fissures. His palette, compared to that of the Modernists, is a sombre scale of grays, neutral blues and greens, and siennas, but his surfaces, glazed again and again with transparent colors, shine out with the brilliant hardness of enamels.

Within recent years, after an interval of unaccountable neglect, Ryder has been arbitrarily claimed by several of the most advanced sects in contemporary art. The Expressionists, misinterpreting his independence, have cited him as the exemplar of lyricism—one of those spontaneous organisms that "see, feel and burst into expression." In his poetry—Ryder occasionally tried his hand at versifying—this may possibly be true, but his poetry is naïve and worthless. As a painter, he was a minute observer of life who consolidated his dreams and objectified them with the methodical industry of an Italian Primitive or a New Bedford cabinet maker. The Abstractionists, or exponents of "pure art," struck by his remarkable sense of design, have tried to forget that he was an American and a painter of ships, barnyards and rocky coves. In mortal terror of identifying themselves with bourgeois reactions to the subject matter of pictures, they have robbed his art of its primary human function, namely, the conveyance of a meaning, and have exalted it to an eminence inaccessible except to specialists; they have ignored one of the cardinal elements of production—the motif, the character of a scene, or object, which unlocks the experiences of the artist and solicits his creative energy; they regard his forms as geometric integers in a scheme of plastic relationships, and are thrown into a spasm of pure æsthetic ecstasy by these formal elements.

That Ryder was a remarkable designer is obvious to anyone who has seen his paintings, or the reproductions of his paintings; that his work is essentially pictorial—as devoid of literature and anecdote as the canvases of Cézanne—is equally beyond argument; but to assert that his designs were dictated by a desire to establish bits of form in orderly sequences and not to give dramatic emphasis and meaning to his experiences is to talk nonsense. Ryder was lucky enough to feel certain aspects of life more fully and more profoundly than most people, and artist enough to seek out exactly the proper symbols for his moods and responses, in order to present them with the maximum of communicability. Hence the extreme simplicity of his pictures, the avoidance of detail, the absence of everything that might lead to contradictory emotions. In his own sphere his art is flawless. His imagination is rigorously controlled. He removes the capricious and irrelevant matter from a given experience, and renders it in all its intensity; and he has a painter's eye for exciting shapes and values peculiar to the visual arts.

There is no need to speculate on Ryder's ultimate position among painters; the ranking of artists is a useless pastime. It will suffice to indicate the boundaries of the particular field in which he is, unquestionably, a master. Puritan he was born and Puritan he remained. A large, full-blooded, anthropological inquiry into the life and habits of man was as foreign to him as it was to his compatriot, Hawthorne. Not that he was abnormal or exotic—the path of his emotional journey lay along the horizon of the world in which the reckless human comedy is played. Wine, women and song did not move him—it was always pity, terror, and the sea. The rarer and more uncertain states of the soul—the sudden fear of death, the pitiable yearning to escape the asperities of life, the intoxication of moonlight, the unattainable desire for the Forest of Arden—constituted the major part of his experiences. But his dreams did not disorganize him, or turn him into an æsthetic fool, as is generally the case with those who deal with the less common emotions. He retained his composure and his excellent good humor, and the soberness and routine diligence with which he painted tempered his mind and delivered him from manias and subjective absurdities. Ryder stands out today as one of the noblest figures in modern art. He was neither a Bohemian nor a slave to European cults. He was simply an American with good sense, a fine passion for paint, and the ability to discover dramatic material in his own country.

CLINICAL NOTES

BY GEORGE JEAN NATHAN

Harding as Don Juan.—A certain amount of blather has been written, a considerable amount more voiced and a perhaps even greater amount suppressed in the matter of the book called "The President's Daughter." By a woman named Britton, the tome, as everyone now knows, purports to chronicle the author's love affair with the late lamented Warren Gamaliel, an alliance which resulted in a bootleg baby. It has been argued against the publication of the book, first, that, even if wholly true, it is in deplorable taste; second, that a President of the United States, however slippery his foot, should, in the higher interests of the state, be held sacrosanct in such cases; third, that—but I need not enumerate; the objections are sufficiently typical to be recognizable. What is more, they are also uniformly idiotic. The book in question is in no more deplorable taste than, say, Sainte-Beuve's "Mes Poisons," yet there have been few yelps against the latter. It is, further, no more justly to be condemned for casting reflections on a President of the United States—and a very inferior one, to boot—than would be the several recent lives of George Washington, the greatest President the Republic has had. Objection to the book on these grounds and on the others that they connote are essentially dubious, and plainly hollow. There is just one sound objection that may be made against the book and that—brushing aside its spurious posture as a plea for more merciful laws in relation to illegitimacy—is that it offers itself as a great love story and contrives only to be a very cheap and very shoddy one. Harding may or may not have been an estimable man in other ways, but one thing is certain and that is that he was a dull lover. Nor, forgetting momentarily my rôle of gallant and remembering only my rôle as critic, does La Britton seem to have been any better. To offer to the public a book recounting the mewings, purrings and back-fence crim. con. of such a couple, and at a price for which the public might buy the "Divina Commedia," "The Autobiography of Benvenuto Cellini" or even "The Life of Gaby Deslys," is a leap far beyond the reasonable.

Automat Kultur.—Our friend, the stranger from Mars, arriving suddenly in our midst, would unquestionably be stunned by the unwonted air of culture which currently pervades the republican scene. On all sides, he would hear a familiarity with hitherto dark subjects; on all sides, an acquaintance with terminology hitherto wholly dissociated from the American vocabulary. Such words and phrases as brachycephalic, dolichocephalic, Homo neanderthalensis, Cro-Magnon, transcendental dialectic, creative evolution, hero-morality, Greek demonology and behaviorism would fall with a promiscuous novelty upon his ear, and he would be puzzlingly entertained by a widespread and apparently intimate knowledge of such esoteric topics as the Dikasteria, the causes of the Peloponnesian war, the philosophy of Empedocles, the "Novum Organum," the bipolar attitude, the erotogenetic theories of Oberholzer, the technique of Berlioz and the love life of Benedetto Croce. His awe and bewilderment, however, would not last long, for if he hung around for more than a few minutes he would discover that beyond these impressive conversational Alps lay only a wop numskullery, full of sound and significant of nothing.

During the last two or three years, the country has assimilated a superficial veneer of culture as high-sounding and as false as an April Fool's Day fire alarm. Countless Outline books, Stories of this and that, and other such short-cuts to knowledge have enjoyed a tremendous popularity and have been seized upon by the mob to acquire in a few hours the wisdom of the ages. Plato, Spinoza and Kant have been mastered during lunch; the history of mankind has been learned in the shower-bath; the mysteries of science and the arts, from the Copernican theory to the first movement of Beethoven's C minor, have been gobbled whole while changing shirts. The most casual conversation, formerly given over to jazz, baseball and the one about the Irishman and the Jew, is now interlarded with learned allusions to the Lamarckian view of evolution, Locke's "Essay on the Human Understanding," the myth in primitive psychology, and the idiosyncrasies of the ego. The populace drops its money into the book-seller's slot and draws out educational sandwiches, mainly cheese. A homeopathic Kultur spreads from coast to coast. The world's literature is reduced to a five-foot shelf; the piano is mastered by mail in ten days; the whole history of civilization is compressed into a book shorter than a single novel by Knut Hamsun. And a comprehensive sophisticated ignorance decorates the countryside. Everybody is educated, like a coon debating club.

Interior Decoration.—Our above-mentioned friend, the Martian, turning from the conversation of the American people and entering their homes—at least the homes of those fairly well-off in the world's goods—would presently be unable to deduce from his surroundings whether he was in the houses of Englishmen, Frenchmen, Spaniards, Italians or Russians. It is the aim of every American who owns so much as two shares of General Motors to make the inside of his house look as un-American as possible. With the help of a fifty-cent illustrated magazine or a five thousand dollar interior decorator, depending upon the state of his purse, he sets about sedulously deleting from it every vestige of Americanism and garnishing it instead with absurd alien embellishments. Ransacking auction sales and imitation antique factories, he goes in for Louis XV bedrooms, Renaissance dining-rooms, Georgian libraries and Græco-Roman lavatories, with side-flings at Louis XIV drawing-rooms, Turkish dens and Spanish vestibules. Russian candlesticks, Hepplewhite commodes, Greek urns, Persian prayer-rugs, Wedgewood ash-trays, duplicates of Du Barry's bed and Henry VIII's clothes-tree, imitation Flemish tapestries, Chinese lamps, Japanese screens, Benedictine refectory tables, statues of Buddha, Delft friezes and German beer Seidel regale the visiting eye and, save for an occasional spittoon and such times as a parade goes by and pater familias puts out a flag, it would take a Dupin, suddenly released from blindfold, to guess where he was at.

The moment an American swindles a fellow American out of anything over $10,000 and his wife becomes privy to the news, there ensues an immediate moving out of Grand Rapids and a moving in of the Louis. Tudor paneling takes the place of the wall-paper with the red roses on it; a fake Florentine cabinet is installed where the old horse-hair sofa stood; a department-store version of a Sixteenth Century chasuble takes the place of the old crazy-quilt; and a Ming cake-box now rests on the table that held the sea-shell from Atlantic City and the souvenir hour-glass from Niagara Falls. Bogus Derbyshire chairs, counterfeit Queen Anne and Directoire mirrors, Woolworth Venetian glass, pseudo-Gothic brocatelle curtains and Della Robbia sitz-baths clutter up the seigniorial housescape, and Louis Quatorze, Quinze and Seize beds, chaises-longues and stools are rushed in to take the place of the former brass bedsteads, folding davenport and Morris and Roycroft chairs. An old Spanish gateway, purchased at an auction sale of the household goods of the illustrious Castillian don, the late Irving Goldfarb, is put up where the folding-doors were, and the scene is further enriched with what one sees marvelously advertised in the interior decoration magazines as Chinese samovars and William and Mary corner cabinets of Chinese lacquer.

When one enters the home of a foreigner, one is able to recognize it at once, whether it be English, German, French, Italian or what not. When one enters the home of a well-to-do American, one feels as if one were on a Cook's Tour.

A Prize-Fight.—One hundred and fifty thousand suckers, laying out two and a half million dollars for the privilege, gather around a platform to learn which of two men is the greatest fighter in the world. One of the men smears vaseline all over his face so the other's blows will glide off and not hurt him. The second man is floored by the first man for the regulation count, but the latter forgets Rule No. 306 G., fails to walk to a corner previously indicated by the board of regents, and so the contest to determine which is the greatest fighter in the world must begin all over again. A rumor spreads that one of the contestants has soaked his gloves in a cement solution; another rumor has it that the other is wearing his pants an inch and a half below the belt line so that, if he feels things going against him, he may claim one in the belly to be a foul. No blows, or so-called rabbit punches, on the back of the neck are allowed, nor is it permitted that one man stand over the other in the event of a devastating wallop, as the man knocked down must be allowed ample time to get full on his feet again and be perfectly comfortable before the other is privileged to take a sock at him. A rumor is now heard that Sig Rothenberg, the Cincinnati gambler, has framed the fight by giving one of the men's sister-in-laws a hundred thousand dollars in Liberty bonds. The sports writer for the Bluebird Syndicate claims to have definite knowledge that the other man has five thicknesses of tire tape wrapped around his knuckles. One of the men, the one who lay on the floor earlier in the fight for four seconds more than the stipulated ten, hands the other, now thoroughly disgusted, a mild poke on the nose, the final bell rings, and the judges declare him champion of the world.

Meanwhile, a couple of two hundred pound truck-drivers over on Ninth avenue go to it and lick living hell out of each other.

First Ladies of the Land.—Whether by design or accident, the fact remains that, with one small exception, no girl with a fancy Christian name has ever diverted the eye of a President of the United States to the matrimonial altar. Save for a single Dolly, no woman with an overly ornamental or cutie label has thus far, in the history of the Republic, shared the throne. The thirty-three spouses of the twenty-eight Presidents (one, Buchanan, remained a bachelor) have all borne plain, everyday first names. Two were Marthas, two were Marys, two were Abigails, two were Elizas, two were Ediths, two were Julias, two were Carolines, two were Ellens, and the rest were Sarahs, Louisas, Rachels, Hannahs, Annas, Margarets, Janes, Lucys, Lettys, Franceses, Idas, Alices, Helens, Florences and Graces. A Lucretia, it is true, became Mrs. Garfield, but the President never called her that; from his courtship days she was always plain Lucy to him. If Al Smith succeeds to the throne, he will share it with a Catherine. If Lowden, sitting beside him will be a Florence. If inconceivably McAdoo, it will be an Eleanor. If Dawes, a Caro, and if Jim Reed, a Lura may boggle statistics. But in the general run of things it apparently has always been a bad day for the Gladyses, Maes, Violets, Daisys, Pearls, Hazels, Maybells, Bonnies, Trixies, Dots and other such little sunshines.

THE THEATRE

BY GEORGE JEAN NATHAN

The Trombone and the Derby

THE mood of indignation tends gradually to disappear from the drama. Just as somebody or other invariably named Horwitz seems always to be writing indignant letters to the Nation, so in days past were dramatists habitually given to writing plays wholesale in resentment of this and that. It takes no veteran to remember the time when the bulk of drama, both good and bad, was not so much for something as against something, and when the opposition was couched in terms that clearly betrayed the playwright's animosity, and the animosity no less of the audiences he catered to. With the increasing sophistication of dramatic writers and theatre audiences, the era of huff has begun to fade, and the drama of today, as a consequence, is generally found to be one of relative equanimity and composure.

The theory that a dramatist must, because of the very nature of his medium, feel strongly if he would sway his audiences may be sound enough if one visualizes his audiences as a pack of dolts, but, with audiences somewhat worthier, it is a better theory that he must rather think strongly and then set about cautiously to filter his thought through characters who at least have the air of being nonchalant toward his conclusions. That the drama is fundamentally emotional may be true enough, but the definition has been man-handled out of all sense. There are many kinds of emotion, yet the definition coddlers almost uniformly think of just two: love and hate, conveniently overlooking the fact that some of the finest drama deals with emotions vastly more trivial, emotions that may be said, indeed, to be almost negative emotions and that often are far removed from the heart and the spleen. The best comedy written in France in the present century is founded entirely upon the emotion of physical irritation; one of the best comedies that has come out of Ireland in the same period is founded entirely upon the emotion of pleasurable self-gullery; the drama of Shaw, with small exception, is as unemotional as a mushroom, as is some of the best of Pirandello. But all this is somewhat beside the point. The point is that high emotion and the so-called taking of sides are bedfellows, and that indignation is their child. As high emotion has been relegated to the background in drama, the taking of sides has retreated into the background with it, and indignation has accordingly vanished.

The drama of today does not tell its audience something; it suggests to the audience that the latter may judge of what it says for itself. It gives it sly hints on the way, to be sure, but it no longer, in the aggregate, looks the audience straight in the eye and tells it to go to Heaven. The moralist tone has vamoosed, and so, too, has the index finger of admonition and warning. There is a soothing moral and philosophical double entente in the case of the former heroes and villains, and audiences are permitted to feel for themselves even if they are not always permitted to think for themselves. The stage gutter is no longer full of wayward women; gentlemen with black moustaches and sleek evening coats no longer inevitably end up either at Sing Sing or Frank Campbell's; blond bravos do not regularly marry their bosses' daughters; and capital and labor often come to decisionless dog-fall. Pistols are relegated to 10-20-30 melodrama, and handcuffs have passed out with Houdini. There used to be two sides to every question, unless it were a dramatic one. That is changed now. So great has the change been, indeed, that the drama of today not only presents the two sides but periodically, as in the instance of something like Maugham's "The Constant Wife," generously and open-mindedly presents three!

Strong feeling is too often the mark of a weak dramatist. The inferior man is chronically an indignant one. There is small place for indignation in art. The Eroica, let us remember, was finished before its composer's momentary wrath caused him to change its title; nor was it surely save deliberately that the greatest tragic dramatist of all time put many of his most indignant speeches in the mouths of his clowns. The boiling acerbity of Strindberg has today become the material of light comedy and farce, and the passionate alarms of French problem plays find less and less favor even in France where, year by year, the Guitrys and Armons and Gerbidons wean more and more customers away from the Batailles and Bernsteins and Hervieux. Sex, the chief ground of dramatic indignations of the past, has become theatrically largely a laughing matter, or if not precisely a laughing matter, most often a casual one. Even the occasional boob-bouncer that seeks deliberately to go after the old trade with the Jones and Pinero sex furors finds it necessary to add at least a sensational murder or some such circus-act to the business if it would effectively diddle its audiences. It is clearly thus that a "Mrs. Dane's Defence" of the earlier dispensation becomes a "The Letter" and that Iris Bellamy becomes Iris March. Wedekind, in his louder sex moments, is now snickered at even by the Germans, and what prosperity he still enjoys is at the hands of Berlin Greenwich Villagers still wet behind the ears. Hauptmann, sensing the change, abandons sex and turns to theology. Even the philosophical Elinor Glyn, Sudermann, waxes sardonic. Across the border, Donnay turns to satire and ironic comedy and the erstwhile paprika-schnitzel, Brieux, to economics and international amity.

Following the tendency of drama, stage direction has naturally come also to pacify itself. So far, indeed, has this direction gone that even where the drama still shows traces of indignation it exerts itself to the utmost to conceal the fact. Even a murder in this day is staged something after the manner of a petting party, and loud voices are confined to musical comedy. Fifteen and twenty years ago, a play was regarded as dramatic in proportion to the racket it made; climaxes were indistinguishable from college yells and evangelical sermons. Actors like the late James K. Hackett and John Mason, who could shiver the ceiling with bull-roads, were never out of jobs, and stage directors without megaphones were as rare as movie directors without puttees and polo shirts. All this is no more. The stage of today, by and large, discharges its drama through a muffler; the old trombone has a derby hitched to its snout. There are, of course, virtues to the new order, but one cannot help feeling that there are also weaknesses. The thing has been carried too far. It is all very well for a certain species of drama to be staged piano, but there is surely another species that may be staged thus only at the expense of absurdity. Yet melodrama and drawing-room comedy are often produced in an identical fashion, with the result that the theatre is growing monotonous. The so-called natural, life-like type of staging is taking the inherent bounce out of many an otherwise popping play. Too much naturalness is as bad for the theatre as too much theatricality is bad for life. A toy bear that growls and walks when wound up is all right, but one that would also bite one in the leg wouldn't do at all. The theatre, too, is a toy and, like a toy, though it may well improve itself, should remain more or less the plaything it is and not try to make itself indistinguishable from the actuality it merely and properly pretends to be.

Mr Arthur Hopkins may be singled out as one producer who arbitrarily seeks to reduce all plays, irrespective of their nature, to gumshoes. Where this kind of staging is excellent enough when the play in hand is that kind of play, it becomes grotesque and defeatist when the play no more calls for suavely quiet staging than the "Kaisermarsch" calls for the tempo of "Schmerzen." In the case of "Burlesque," the Hopkins staging has succeeded in converting what should be gay hoopla interspersed with periodic rearo-bumpings into something very much like a Hubert Henry Davies tea-cart comedy. And in the case of "The House of Women," though the staging is more appropriate, it succeeds nevertheless in ridding a drama already undramatic of what minimum of drama it possesses. It may be life; it may even be art; but I'll be good and damned if it isn't very bad theatre.

"The House of Women" is a play made by Louis Bromfield from his novel, "The Green Bay Tree." The job shows a sorry unacquaintance with the requirements of drama; it amounts simply to a reduction of the materials of the novel to the two and one half hours' theatrical span with no effort made to give the compressed materials dramatic life. The theme is handled in the even-tempered fashion of the day, a sort of Fanny Hawthorne with undertones of Nathaniel and played with the fingers crossed. The leading rôles were acted by Nance O'Neil and Elsie Ferguson. Every time Miss O'Neil made an exit, there was loud applause, which the actress doubtless accepted as a testimonial to her virtuosity but which seemed to me to be impolitely and critically significant. Miss Ferguson, judging from her laryngeal gurgles, is still apparently of the conviction that a dramatic rôle is an excellent thing to cure a sore throat with.

II

The Bane of the Entr' Acte

Something will have to be done pretty soon about this business of intermissions. Although the theatre has improved itself in all sorts of directions in recent times, it has, with negligible exception, overlooked its perhaps most senseless and damaging shortcoming, to wit, the custom of interrupting a play at two or more intervals during its course, sending the audience out into the lobby on furloughs, and messing up beyond repair both the audience's mood and the even tenor of the play. An example is to be had in the instance of "Porgy," the Theatre Guild's first production of the current season. Here we have what might have been an interesting dramatic exhibit almost totally ruined by three long intermissions, to say nothing of six shorter ones between scenic adjustments. Each of these pauses in the dramatic narrative acts as a wet blanket both upon the narrative itself and, even more so, upon the audience, for it is only by a severe self-imposed strain that the audience manages to recover its several moods once they have been doused out of activity by the breaks in the play's flow. The net impression of the evening, consequently, is of a series of intermissions periodically interrupted by a play, and when such an impression works its influence upon an auditorium no genius on earth can send an audience out into the night either fully persuaded or satisfied.

It is high time, it seems to me, that this foolish tradition as to the necessity of entr'actes be seized by the tail and got rid of. The theory that an audience's attention must be given periodic respites and that an audience asked to exercise its faculties for two straight hours without rest would gradually become weary and offer a poor percussion, is, I dare say, quite as hollow as most theories that cling like barnacles about the theatre. Even a moving picture audience, the lowest form of audience conceivable, willingly—even enthusiastically—sits at rapt attention for something like two straight hours at the so-called feature film productions displayed in the Broadway theatres. And if such morons can manage the business, I can see no reason why the intelligent audiences that the Theatre Guild and the better grade producers cater to cannot be expected to do the same. The tremendous heterogeneous crowds that patronize professional baseball sit calmly for hours with their eyes glued to the rapidly shifting and often trying play on the diamond and, save for a moment's stretch in the seventh inning, never relax their absorption or their sterner. Yet the theatre believes that when these same people come into it to watch a play that begins at quarter to nine and ends at quarter to eleven, a period of two short hours, it is necessary to give them at least two substantial periods of truce.

The intermission idea is all very well in the case of musical shows, where the audience's mood and the show's continuity are not impaired by it, but in the case of drama it makes, save on rare occasions, for disaster. If a movie audience can stand the two-hour screen version of "What Price Glory?" without let-up, surely a theatre audience should be able to stand the two-hour stage version of the same play in the same way. That it can stand it and will stand it gladly, to its own greater enjoyment and to the greater prosperity of the dramatic manuscript, our impresarios will soon discover if they give it the chance. Many a play that now goes to pieces during the intermissions will thus gain an added quality of coherence, evenness and interest, and many an audience that presently doesn't know why it is that it gradually loses concern with a play will quickly be conscious of the nature of its previous difficulty.

"Porgy," a dramatization of the Du Bose Heyward novel by the author and his wife, is entertaining theatrical fare when the intermissions do not kill it. The Guild has astutely engaged real Negroes to play it, and if these Negroes are not especially good actors the Guild has exercised the cunning to make them seem so by the wily device of incorporating into the presenting troupe several white actors so extremely bad that the black ones seem Salvini and Bernhardt in comparison. The staging of the exhibit by one Mamoulion, who has dabbled in opera productions, has been nicely contrived except for the seduction scene in the palmetto jungle, which has been directed as if it were something by A. A. Milne.

III

This Business of Casting

There is a belief, still fondly nursed by certain critics, that if an actor be talented enough he can play almost any part, even one to which he may not physically be suited, and by the sheer exercise of his skill make his audience unconscious of his corporeal unfitness for the rôle. To this belief, I have devoted well nigh a quarter of a century to win myself, but with, I regret to have to report, a very dubious success. I hope I do not boast unduly when I say that I have perhaps as flexible an imagination as the next man. I am, indeed, at least so far as the theatre is concerned, able to hocus-pocus myself into imagining things that would make any competent alienist who happened to be a stranger to the theatre scratch his nose and shake his head meaningly. But this amazing imagination of mine rebels when it comes to grips with the problem of persuading myself that a fifty-year-old actor with a bald head and a sizeable belly becomes Little Lord Fauntleroy by the simple device of putting on velvet knee-pants and a blond wig, and by bringing to his interpretation a rich and varied experience in "The Lyons Mail," "Rosmersholm" and "The Marble Heart."

Do I exaggerate? A bit, no doubt, but not so much as some may believe. For every season reveals casting almost as ridiculous. Who fails to remember, for example, Mrs. Fiske's attempt to play a sixteen-year-old girl in the first portion of Edward Sheldon's "The High Road," or Nance O'Neil's last year's effort to convince the trade, in the play called "Fog-Bound," that she was a wild young thing of seventeen or eighteen? And who doesn't recall Frank Gillmore in a yellow toupé trying to palm himself off as the youthful Karl in the New Theatre's production of "Old Heidelberg," Otis Skinner as the fiery bull-fighter in "Blood and Sand," Robert Edeson as the college boy in "Class-mates," Madame Nazimova as the aphrodisiacal flapper in "Dagmar," Jacob Ben-Ami as the American husband in "Welded," or the papa who was cast for the little boy in the memorable production of Wedekind's "Awakening of Spring" a number of years ago at the Maxine Elliott Theatre? To cozen the imagination to accept such jocosities seriously is a job either for lay idiots or for professional critics given to a lingering schoolboy adulation of actors and to a comprehensive faith in that most bogus of mummer monkeyshines, versatility. Although an actor may in his day play many parts, he is generally found to play those parts best for which he is physically and temperamentally most patly suited. Mansfield, when he tried Prince Karl, made a spectacle of himself; Bernhardt did the same when she tried Joan; Maude Adams became ridiculous when she essayed the rôle of the cocky rooster in "Chanticleer"; Ethel Barrymore's late attempt at Juliet need not be recalled to you. Talent has nothing, or at best very little, to do with it; all the talent in the world can't duel successfully with stubborn Nature. Yet the actor is vain enough to try to remake God.

There was recently put on in New York a comedy by Alice Duer Miller called "The Springboard." The leading rôle in the piece was that of a handsome and invincible lady-killer, a magnifico at whose very sight women high and low frothed at the mouth, in Wilson Mizner's old phrase, like a cream-puff. Paving the entrance of the character, there were many lines attesting to his dismaying beauty, his Spring-like youth, his sleek look, his Casanova squint and his menace to the fair sex. The audience, particularly the feminine element in it, was agog. Surely, when the great moment came, there would be revealed a fellow to floor the auditorium! A twenty-five-year-old George Alexander with Valentino overtones, Byron undertones and something of Benvenuto Cellini in the middle register. A suave and silken one to put Adonis and Rupert Brooke to shame, and to send William Hickey back to his chambermaids. A gay and debonair one to bring about a revival of the old cigarette pictures, to set even Peggy Joyce's heart to pumping, and to make the movie magnates jump for contracts and the ink. A hush. A pause. An audible tremor. And then—and then out moseyed Mr. Sidney Blackmer!

This Mr. Blackmer is doubtless an estimable man in many ways (one of them, unfortunately, is not acting), but all the make-up and doggy tailors and haberdashers on earth can't combine to make him anything approaching the character that he was supposed to be in this play. With a middle that tends more and more to resemble a chianti bottle, with a manner as incandescent as a chilblain, with a speaking voice as flat as a rained-on drum, and with all the natural charm of address visible on the average picture post-card, the actor riddled his rôle and the play where they stood. No play can stand such casting. Life itself can stand no such casting. Mussolini must look his part to gain the favor of the world. The trouble with the Russian Bolsheviks is that their leaders look too much like Trotsky and Lenin.

IV

The Passing of French Farce

The student of theatrical affairs must rapidly come to the conclusion that French farce has become a pretty dead thing outside of France, where the trite and stale have a habit of enjoying long life. The prompt failure of the boulevard farce, "The Matrimonial Bed," over here—it was Seymour Hicks, like all such favorite English actors, hardly the play, that ran on in London—brings to mind the fact that almost all the French farces that have been produced in America, England and Germany in the last six years or so have come croppers. For one that has modestly succeeded, due to the appearance in it of some public pet, a half-dozen have failed. And the failures have been so abrupt that one is brought to speculate as to the causes.

There was a time, not so many years ago, when French farce prospered outside its own country and when French farce writers could look to foreign markets for substantial royalty returns. Today, it becomes increasingly evident that those markets are getting to be extremely cold and that a completely arctic temperature is in sight. As to the reasons, I offer a few guesses. In the first place, American, English and German theatrical impresarios have almost invariably during the last decade imported the least original and meritorious of the Gallic farces, neglecting entirely those manuscripts that might revive and stimulate the waning interest in this particular form of stage fare. Among the many amusing farces produced on the boulevards in the last fifteen years, I can't think of more than two that have been produced in any one of the three countries named. The farces that have been produced have been of the second, third and even tenth cut, without novelty, without bounce, without quality of any kind. The best work of such expert farce writers as Guitry, Dieudonné and Coolus has been neglected, and only the uninspired hack work of the rubber-stamp boys displayed to the alien gaze. It was not long, therefore, before alien audiences began to grow tired of the same old door-banging, bed-bouncing rigmarole and before they withdrew their trade.

In the second place, a change has come over thitherward audiences in a sex direction. There was a time when the sex didos of the French farce writers seemed very saucy and juicy, but today they have come to take on an air of conventionality, and not only of conventionality but, I dare say, of relative innocence. The so-to-speak more serious drama has gone so far with sex themes that the French farces, even at their naughtiest, begin to seem tame. What French farce in the last half dozen years, for example, has gone farther with sex than such a play as "The Captive," or "Women Go On Forever," or "Bride of the Lamb," or "Seed of the Brute," or—to speak of farces—the German ones called "The Werewolf" or "The Command To Love"? The days when a French sex farce seemed to a British or American audience something like a visit to a peep-show have disappeared down the chute of time. Not a single scene in any one of these farces produced in America in the last ten years has brought so pleasurable a blush to the boob cheek as the nymphomaniac episode in "The Shanghai Gesture," the scene between the clergyman and Sadie Thompson in "Rain," or the confession scene in "The Trial of Mary Dugan." And not one of the French farces has gone farther in a loud sex direction than fifty such locally exhibited dramatic affairs as "No More Women," "Gentle Grafters," "Creoles," "Scotch Mist," "An American Tragedy," "The Firebrand," "The Pearl of Great Price," "This Was A Man," "Sex," "The Virgin Man," "Pinwheel," "A Lady in Love," "A Very Wise Virgin," and so on. In Germany, the naughtiest French farce imaginable takes on the aspect of a strawberry festival beside such dramatic works as "Reigen," "Erdgeist," and "Vatermord."

With the sex bait diminished, the French farce writers find themselves in sore straits. But very few of them are really witty fellows and these few have been discouraged by the chilly attitude toward them of the American and English entrepreneurs. Until their farces are produced in America and in England—and in Germany—, French farce must remain in abeyance so far as these audiences are concerned.

THE LIBRARY

BY H. L. MENCKEN

The Races of Man

ENVIRONMENT AND RACE, by Griffith Taylor.
$6.50. 8½ x 5¾; 354 pp. New York: The Oxford University Press.

DR. TAYLOR, who is head of the department of geography at the University of Sydney, is convinced, like most other students of pre-history, that the human race originated in Central Asia. There the brothers of the gorilla and the chimpanzee first began to lose their hair, organize themselves into political parties, and practise magic. There grammar was invented, and adultery, and Service. Was the race composed, at the start, of a single pair, Adam and Eve? On the whole, it seems rather unlikely. The Negritoes (who are not to be confused with the Negroes) present so many anomalies that it is hard to fit them into the rest of the human species. It thus appears to be likely that they had different anthropoid ancestors. But all the other races are obviously related, and the differences separating them, however important they may look superficially, are found to be trivial on analysis. They all came out of Central Asia, in a long series of great waves, and the marks of those waves are still visible, not only in Europe, but also in Africa, Southern Asia, and the two Americas.

The nature of the men who came in the first wave is not clear, though we know that they were very primitive in type. The few skulls and other bones discovered so far indicate, indeed, that they were scarcely more than refined apes. But when Neanderthal man came in a genuine human being entered upon the scene, and upon his heels, though probably only after an interval of thousands of years, came Crô-Magnon man, a fellow fully equal, physically and mentally, to many of the races dominant in the world today. He brought Negritoes with him, probably as slaves, and for many centuries he was the master of Europe. But in the course of time he succumbed to later comers. Of these there were, according to Dr. Taylor, two waves, one making westward along the north shore of the Mediterranean and the other penetrating the more difficult country along the Baltic. The Mediterranean newcomers were a short, swarthy, long-headed race, and they survive today in Italy, Spain, Greece and Southern France, and along the coast of Ireland, Scotland and Wales. The Baltic immigrants were tall, blond and long-headed. They were the ancestors of the celebrated Nordics of our present age.

But that was not the end. After the Mediterraneans and the Nordics, between them, had driven Crô-Magnon man, who was much superior to either of them, into a few remote fastnesses, they were themselves beset by another immigration from Central Asia. This was the immigration of the Alpines, who drove a wedge between the Mediterraneans and Nordics, and finally forced them to the periphery of the continent. The Alpines were neither so short and swart as the Mediterraneans nor so tall and blond as the Nordics. They ran to chestnut hair, stout legs and broad shoulders, and the color of their eyes ranged from blue to a dark brown. They are the dominant race in Europe today, despite all the current gabble about the Nordics, and they seem likely to conquer America as well. Their heads are not long, but round. They are an industrious people, with a great capacity for learning, and they excel at war, though they do not appear to enjoy it as much as the Nordics.

Dr. Taylor believes that these Alpines represents the highest type that the human race has yet attained. They have relatives in Central Asia in the Mongols, and wherever they have gone, whether in Europe, in Africa, in Southern Asia and Oceania or in the two Americas, they have driven their predecessors out of the best lands and forced them to take refuge along bleak coasts and in high mountains. Men carrying the blood of these predecessors are plentiful along the edges of the European peninsula. Fleure, a Franco-English anthropologist, has found Neanderthal men in impressive numbers in Wales, and Crô-Magnon men are not infrequently encountered in the remoter parts of Southern France. The Nordics, as everyone knows, survive along the shores of the Baltic and the North Sea, and the Mediterraneans still people Southern Italy, Western Spain, most of Greece, and nearly all the islands of the Mediterranean.

Such were the main migrations into Europe, but there were also many minor ones, some of them of great importance. As a result the population of that continent is very confusingly mixed. Many ostensible Italians are almost pure Nordics, and many Danes and even Swedes are largely Mediterranean in blood. There is a great deal of Alpine blood in England, and more in Germany and France. Thus the pressure of the Alpines upon their predecessors is slackened by mixing. But in Asia and Africa, where the same waves rolled over the land, the conflict is still plainly visible. The long-headed races tend to be pushed out of the most desirable land by the broad-heads. They collect in mountain valleys and in swamps along the coast. They take to the sea and so find and people remote islands. The ethnological history of the Pacific is a history of their successive flights. Even among American Indians the process is visible. There are Indians, in Dr. Taylor's judgment, especially in South America, who represent very early races of men, and there are Indians (or, at all events, Eskimos) who belong to that same Mongolian immigration which flooded Central Europe with Alpines.

I commend this book to those persons who have been misled by the ethnological blather that has been loosed upon the world of late by sentimentalists and worse. Its speculations are not set forth as proved facts; they are submitted to a candid world as speculations only. But behind them lies an immense reservoir of knowledge. Dr. Taylor has made human geography his life-long study, and his contributions to it, especially in the Australasian field, are of the first importance. At the end of his book he ventures upon some prophecies regarding the probable future movements of population among the white races. His conclusion is that Europe has almost as many people today as it will ever manage to support, and that Australia is destined to be largely uninhabited forever, but that in the United States there is still room for many millions. In the end, he believes, Chicago will probably be the capital of the whole white race.

The Desert Epic

DEATH COMES FOR THE ARCHBISHOP, by Willa Cather. $2.50. 7½ x 5; 303 pp. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.

WOLF SONG, by Harvey Fergusson. $2.50. 7½ x 5; 206 pp. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.

THERE is a curious likeness between these two stories, though they are separated by some sharp contrasts. Both have to do with the taming of the Old Southwest, and both are character sketches rather than tales. The scene of each is the north central desert region of New Mexico, lying about Santa Fé and Taos, and each deals with the conflict between the old barbaric Mexican civilization and the new order. In "Wolf Song" the time is a century ago, and the old civilization, meeting the hard rush of a wild man from Yankeeedom, floors and tames him. In "Death Comes For the Archbishop," which begins on an Autumn afternoon in 1851, the fortunes of war go the other way. Here the antagonist, true enough, is not a Yankee mountain man; he is, indeed, not a Yankee at all, but a French priest. But it is the vast momentum of the new Republic that lies behind him when he flings himself upon what remains of the ancient Spanish raj, and it is a tight and well-ordered Yankee archdiocese that he leaves to his successors, and another that his chief of staff carves out of the mountain wilds to the northward.

I part from the Cather story with a certain regret that the author did not make this chief of staff the hero of it, instead of the gentler Monsignor Jean Marie Latour. Latour is a charming fellow, but only too often he stiffens into the austere and somewhat fatiguing attitudes of a plaster saint. Not once does he show any heat of honest archiepiscopal passion. There is pertinacity in him, and patience and understanding, and a steady if mild glow of zeal for the True Faith, but no steel. When rough work is to be done he turns naturally to Father Joseph Vaillant, indomitable vicar, gifted cook, hearty drinker, untiring traveler, and heavy weight champion of the Lord. Father Joseph should have been the apostolic delegate to those wilds, and Father Jean Marie a village curé back in Auvergne, tending his placid garden and reading and rereading his dusty books. But the desires of God, published through a committee of three Cardinals, all of them somewhat hazy about New Spain, run otherwise, and so it is not until late in life that Father Joseph puts on a mitre of his own. What a gaudy glimpse we have of him in Colorado, policing the miners! What a story gone to waste!

But of the story that is told there is little complaint to be made. At times, it seems to me, Miss Cather takes the somewhat naïve view of a bishop's business that belongs properly, not to a novelist, but to a highly devoted member of the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, and so her narrative drops to the level of a pious tale. But that is not often. If there is a devotee hidden in her, there is also an immensely skillful story-teller. What could be more dramatic, more waggish, more thoroughly amusing than the episode of Fray Baltazar and his tragic end on lonely Ácoma? Here, indeed, is a tale informed with all the high humor and washed with all the brilliant color of "The Three-Cornered Hat." The writing throughout is in Miss Cather's best manner. In her English there is no ornateness, but it is surely not monotonous. She has a fine feeling for the beauty of simple words. Her style flows in a quiet, unrestrained, melodious, almost Mozartian manner. She has done stories far richer in content, but she has never exceeded "Death Comes For the Archbishop" as a piece of writing.

"Wolf Song" is far different in manner. There are places where the fashioning of phrases seems to enchant the author, and even to make him drunk. He runs to elisions, inversions, and other rhetorical devices, sometimes to the good of the narrative but sometimes to its damage. That narrative, however, can stand the burden. It is a veritable riot of blazing color. The Old Southwest is made to palpitate with such light and heat that they are felt almost physically, and the people that gallop across the scene are full of the juices of life. No more real mountain man than Sam Lash has ever got upon paper. In him one senses the brobdingnagian harshness and lustiness of the whole species: he is half civilized man and half painted savage. The tale finds him roaring down upon sun-drenched Taos like some high wind from his own wilds—a hero meteoric, and almost meteorological. The dark-eyed Lola Salazar succumbs at once, and presently she is off for his mountains with him, her family in frantic pursuit. Sam is not afraid of Mexican knives, nor even of artillery. He is a hero of the cut of Jim Bridger or Paul Bunyan. When he wants a girl he takes her.

But there is something in Lola that is more than girl. She is the decorum of the city; she is the ancient assurance that is Spain. Lash, disdaining the hazards that he knows by old experience, trembles before the new hazards that she presents. Once a married man, he is only two-thirds a man. His wife presently in flight, he is less than half a man. The tale deals with his gradual surrender. He comes home from hair-raising adventures among the Indians to sneak into Taos by the back way, and soon he is wholly lost in Lola's soft arms, and one gets a momentary, dreadful glimpse of a future Sam, docilely riding the Salazar ranges. It is an ironical tale, and full of acidulous humors. As a work of art, it is far beyond anything that Mr. Fergusson has done in the past. In it the high promise of "The Blood of the Conquerors," "Capitol Hill" and "Hot Saturday" comes to fulfilment. It is an extraordinarily brilliant and charming story.

A Comedy of Fig-Leaves

SOMETHING ABOUT EVE, by James Branch Cabell. \$2.50. 7 $\frac{3}{8}$ x 5 $\frac{1}{2}$; 364 pp. New York: Robert M. McBride & Company.

"EVERY marriage," says Gerald Musgrave, "gets at least one man into trouble—and it is not always the bridegroom." The text may serve as good as another for "Something About Eve." Gerald, like all of the Cabell heroes, goes on a quest, and again like all of them, he returns from it sadly at fifty-eight, his neck scarred indelibly by the marks of that sinister rope which disguises itself as the naked female arm, and his shoulders burned and cicatrized by female tears. So geht's in die Welt! The story comes down to us from time immemorial, and in the form of a thousand tragedies, but Cabell prefers to view it (with sound sense) as comedy, and in the present version of it he adorns it with all the blooms of his singularly lively and corrosive wit. Who can match him at his diabolical best? If you have a candidate, then bring him on to equal the treatise on the articles of war for married ladies and their lovers, in the fourth chapter of "Something About Eve."

As year chases year the position of Cabell gradually solidifies, and it becomes manifest that his place among the American writers of his time, seen in retrospect, will be at the first table. It used to be the fashion to speak of him as an imitator of Anatole France, but that folly seems to be passing out. There are, in fact, few signs in his books that France has influenced him, save perhaps in non-essentials. His point of view is the result, not of viewing the world from Paris, but of viewing it from Virginia. No more thorough American lives and has his being among us. It was the grotesque quasi-civilization in which, coming to manhood, he found himself that sent him flying to Poictesme, and it is that civilization which he depicts from his exile there. The articles of war that I have mentioned would be unintelligible to a Frenchman, and I fancy that they would also puzzle an Englishman, whose traditional answer to adultery on his premises is a suit in equity. But they must ring true to every American, and especially to every American who has lived in the charming wilderness below Wilmington, Del. The observation in them is of the first degree of accuracy, and they are set forth with all the lovely enchantment of a Vienna waltz.

The Cabellian style shows no sign of playing out. It is still caressingly dulcet, but it is by no means sing-songy. There is steel in it as well as attar of roses. It is capable of a phrase that stings as well as of a phrase that lulls. Cabell clings to certain mannerisms that, I confess, greatly irritate me—for example, his curious avoidance of pronouns, his piling up of proper names—, but that clinging is less amorous and irritating than it used to be—or maybe I have got used to it. In "Something About Eve" the narrative flows in beautiful cadences. There is no harsh improvising in it; it is all thought out to the last place of decimals. Cabell has done better books: I nominated "The High Place" at once. But few of his books are better done.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY AUTHORS

SHERWOOD ANDERSON's latest book is "A New Testament."

HERBERT ASBURY is the author of "Up From Methodism" and "A Methodist Saint." He is now at work on a history of the New York gangs.

T. J. BARTLETT is an Ohioan, and a former newspaper man. He is now engaged in business in New York.

ERNEST BOOTH is serving a life sentence for robbery in Folsom Prison, Represa, California.

THOMAS CRAVEN is a well-known New York art critic, whose work has been commended by such men as Élie Faure in France and Roger Fry in England.

CHESTER T. CROWELL has done newspaper work in Texas and New York, and in Mexico. A biographical sketch of him appears in Editorial Notes in this issue.

J. FRANK DOBIE was born on a ranch in Southwest Texas and educated at Southwestern University and at Columbia, where he took his M.A. He is associate professor of English at the University of Texas, and secretary of the Texas Folk-Lore Society. His "Legends of Texas" is a standard book.

R. L. DUFFUS is an old newspaper man, having served on papers in San Francisco and New York.

KNIGHT DUNLAP, Ph.D. (Harvard), is professor of experimental psychology at the Johns Hopkins, editor of the Journal of Comparative Psychology, and a past president of the American Psychological Association. He is the author of many books.

LOUIS LE FEVRE is a graduate of Harvard. He has been a truck-driver with the French army, a code clerk in the State Department, an accountant, a poultry farmer and a railroad ticket agent. The article in this issue is his second in THE AMERICAN MERCURY.

ROBERT H. LOWIE, Ph.D. (Columbia), is professor of anthropology at the University of California. His "Primitive Society" is a standard work, and he has spent much time in field investigations among the Indians. His latest book is "The Origin of the State."

VIRGINIA MOORE has an A.B. from Hollins College and an A.M. from Columbia. Her first book of poetry, "Not Poppy," was published in 1926.

FERNER NUHN is a young Iowan. His mind was set on a professorship in English, but he gave up the quest in disgust, and is now writing instead.

OTTO ORTMANN is a Baltimorean and a graduate of the Peabody Conservatory of Music, at Baltimore, where he is head of the department of research and acting director. His published works include various monographs on the psychology of music and pedagogical material for the piano.

HENRY F. PRINGLE was formerly on the staff of the New York World. His first book, "Alfred E. Smith: A Critical Study," has just been published.

WALLACE RICE is an old Chicago newspaper man. He is the author of several books.

GEORGE S. SCHUYLER was born in Rhode Island and went to school at Syracuse, N. Y. He has served in the army, and has been a Civil Service clerk, a porter, a dishwasher and a railroad trackwalker. In 1923 he joined the staff of the Messenger, organ of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, and is now its managing editor. He is also a regular contributor to the Pittsburgh Courier, and has written for the Nation, the New Masses, and the World Tomorrow. He lives in New York City.

INDEX TO VOLUME XII

Adamic, Louis: The Yugoslav Speech in America	319	Editorial Notes	No. 45, xlii;
Aikman, Duncan: Deadwood the Dreadful	335	No. 46, lxvi; No. 47, lxxiv; No. 48, lxxxii
Americana	46, 182, 301, 416	Fulks, Clay: The Sacred Poesy of the South	75
Anderson, Sherwood: A Jury Case	431	Garrett, Oliver H. P.: The Gods Confused	327
Arts and Sciences, The:		Goldberg, Isaac: Aaron Copland and His Jazz	63
Biology	316	Gottlieb, Mark J.: Asthma	65
Drawing	204	Haardt, Sara: Licked	51
Ethnology	446	Haste, Gwendolen: He's Taken Her Back Again	105
Linguistics	319	Hogan, Steve: Maze	102
Medicine	65	Jones, Idwal: Evviva San Francisco	151
Music	63, 207, 443	Lea, M. S.: Two-Head Doctors	236
Asbury, Herbert: Days of Wickedness	359	LeFevre, Louis: Philosophers As Kings	393
Professor Jerry Thomas	421	Le Sueur, Meridel: Laundress	98
Authors, The American Mercury	128, 256, 384, 511	Lowie, Robert H.: Prestige Among Indians	446
Bartlett, T. J.: The Roll of Honor	476	Mencken, H. L.: The Library	123, 250, 379, 507
Bausman, Frederick: Under Which Flag?	195	Editorial	34, 159, 285
Beach, Joseph Warren: Body's Breviary	322	Meyer, Adolph E.: Advocatus Diaboli	75
Beaton, Welford: Mad Movie Money	27	Montana Poets	102
Blankenhorn, Heber: The Grandma of the Muck-		Moore, Virginia: Night-Thoughts	398
rakers	87	Moore, Willis Luther: I Am Thinking of Hurri-	81
Booth, Ernest: We Rob a Bank	1	cans
A Texas Chain-Gang	306	McMurtric, Douglas C.: Our Mediæval Typog-	94
Ladies of the Mob	399	raphy
Cain, James M.: Red, White and Blue	129	Nathan, George Jean: The Theatre	117, 244, 373, 501
Cautela, Giuseppe: The Italian Theatre in New		Clinical Notes	113, 241, 370, 498
York	106	Nock, Albert Jay: To Youngsters of Easy Means	20
Check List of New Books	No. 45, xx;	Nuhn, Ferner: Ten	467
No. 46, xxx; No. 47, xxx; No. 48, xxviii		Ortmann, Otto: Piano Technique in the Light of
Clugston, W. G.: Flat Tires on the Farm	352	Experiment	443
Coates, Grace Stone: At Breakfast	102	Overmyer, Grace: Quarter Tones—And Less	207
Postscripts	102	Owens, John W.: Tom Heflin	272
Response	102	Parsons, Homer M.: Immigrant's Progress	102
Cobb, Margaret: Lady Back-Slappers	222	Pearl, Raymond: The Biology of Superiority	257
Craven, Thomas: The Decline of Illustration	204	Pratt, Julius W.: Footnote to the War of 1812	230
An American Master	490	Pringle, Henry F.: Hearts and Flowers—And
Crowell, Chester T.: Now We Got Probeesh	485	Cash	408
Davis, Horace A.: Officers of the Court	293	Rice, Wallace: The Vulgate in American Fiction	464
De Casseres, Benjamin: The Broadway Mind	178	Schuyler, George S.: Our White Folks	385
Elegy in a Malty Mood	288	Seibel, George: Notes for a Comic History	162
Dobie, J. Frank: The Pacing White Mustang	435	Stevens, Donald: Wind of the Rockies	104
Douglas, W. A. S.: The Passing of Vaudeville	188	Strawn, Arthur: A Man of Heart	135
Egypt	267	Suckow, Ruth: Good Pals	211
Dublin, Louis I.: Life, Death and the Negro	37	A German Grandfather	280
Duffus, R. L.: The Grandson of the Liberator	449	Thompson, Lloyd S.: Montana Winds	103
Dunlap, Knight: Evolution, or What Have You?	458	Tompkins, Raymond S.: Princes of the Press	171
Dunn, Emmett Reid: Heat or Heredity?	316	Tully, Jim: Bull Horrors	144
Editorial	34, 159, 285	Walker, W. M.: Pittsburgh Plus	12
		Webber, F. R.: Churches in the Moronic Mode	344

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

Performance is but one side of ESSEX value

The Smoothness of Coasting

In outselling any other "Six" at or near the price, almost two to one, the signal thing is not merely the overwhelming preference for the Essex Super-Six, but the source from which it comes.

A great proportion of buyers are owners, former and present, of big and costly cars. They turn to Essex because they find:

The smoothness and performance of their costlier cars.

Comfort and riding ease not excelled in any car.

The roominess and relaxation of their larger cars.

Traffic nimbleness and handling ease unmatched in larger cars.

Economy of operation and maintenance exclusive to Essex.

4-Passenger Speedabout, $700 4-Passenger Speedster, $835 Coach, $735 Coupe, $735 Sedan, $835

All prices f. o. b. Detroit, plus war excise tax

ESSEX Super-Six

lxxxix

If Your Bonds Show a Profit Send for This Folder

Careful analysis of your holdings may show that you have bonds in one or more of the following classes:

1. Bonds selling at or near redemption price.
2. Speculative bonds that have enjoyed good advances.
3. Bonds about to mature.
4. Bonds bearing low interest rates or whose market values have advanced, reducing yield.

With further advances highly improbable, such bonds may be exchanged now at a profit for higher yield securities. Ask for folder which lists over 75 of these issues. Use the coupon. Send for your copy today.

Greenebaum Sons Investment Company

Oldest Real Estate Bond House

FOUNDED 1855 — CHICAGO OFFICES IN PRINCIPAL CITIES

Affiliated with Greenebaum Sons Securities Corporation, New York

Mail This Coupon

Greenebaum Sons Investment Co.
La Salle and Madison Sts., Chicago

Without obligation please send copy of your folder "Increase Your Income" and current list of Greenebaum offerings.

Name.....

Street.....

City..... State.....

Safeguarded Bonds

lxxxii

Editorial NOTES

Mr. Chester T. Crowell has been one of the most frequent and most valued contributors to THE AMERICAN MERCURY. He has written articles on numerous subjects of public interest, and also fiction. But he is a specialist in the physiology and pathology of civilization in Texas. Two of his contributions to those sciences, "Strange News from Texas," in the March, 1925,

Jensen

Chester T. Crowell

issue, and "Journalism in Texas," in the April, 1926, issue, caused small revolutions in that great State. The public jobholders and their friends, the Baptist and Methodist clergy, heaped maledictions upon him, and for weeks stormed this office with blistering letters of protest. They barred THE AMERICAN MERCURY from several of the public libraries and from the so-called universities of the Baptist and Methodist evangelicals. Hardly had this uproar subsided than Mr. Crowell stirred up the animals in another quarter with his article, "A Glance at the Public Schools," in the August, 1926, number. He has also contributed the following: "American Journalism Today," June, 1924; "The Devil Born in Them," July, 1924; "Pariah," August, 1924; "Notes of an Amateur Father," October, 1924; "Davy Crockett," January, 1925; "Mary Fisher's Phil-

Continued on page lxxxiv

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

How many are 421,000 stockholders?

An Advertisement of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company

ON OCTOBER 15th, American Telephone and Telegraph Company checks representing the 152d dividend were mailed to its 421,000 stockholders. That is the largest number of stockholders of any company in the world.

The American Telephone and Telegraph Company is owned by a great investment democracy.

Its dividend checks are cashed at banks in every state in the Union, by people representing all trades, stations and professions.

No institution is more nationally or publicly owned than the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which in turn owns more than 91% of the common stock of the operating companies of the Bell national System. The average holding is 26 shares, and no one person owns as much as 1% of the total stock.

The Bell System was developed in the interest of telephone users and is owned by the public that it serves.

Which do you choose?

NO ONE chooses to be sick and weak. Of course not. But a number of your friends suffer needlessly because they neglected their health.

If they had only known their true condition in time they could have kept fit. But the damage is done now.

If you choose you can avoid such trouble.

In the early stages, before harm is done, most chronic diseases are easily corrected.

The National Bureau of Analysis is protecting the health of many thousands who choose to remain well.

How their health protection plan works, its effectiveness, convenience and economy is explained in their free booklet "The Span of Life." Write today for your copy.

National Bureau of Analysis

209 S. State St., Chicago

Send me your free booklet "The Span of Life," with particulars of your four-minute-a-year plan for better health and longer life.

Name
Street Number
City State

AM-12-27

lxxxiv

Editorial NOTES

Continued from page lxxxii

osophy," May, 1925; "Untamed," November, 1925; "What Price Freedom?," January, 1926; "Cowboys," October, 1926; "The Youngest Generation," April, 1927; and "Now We Got Probeesh," in the current issue.

Mr. Crowell was born in Cleveland in 1888. His father was a pitcher for the home baseball team, and his mother was the daughter of an English portrait painter, who settled in Boston. The profession of his father was, naturally, a source of great delight to him. As he says:

Having a big league pitcher as a father is great stuff. You not only see the games for nothing, but you change schools nearly every year. I cannot now recall even all the States in which I have gone to school. I went to high-school in San Antonio, Texas, and intended to study law, but landed a job as cub reporter for the San Antonio Daily Express during the Summer of 1905 and couldn't turn loose, partly because I loved the work, and partly because my father, whose baseball career had closed some years previous, had just failed in business. During the intervals between reporting fires, accidents, and police doings I continued to study law, but nothing ever came of it. In 1907 I went to the City of Mexico, and was news editor of the Mexican Herald until shortly before the reign of Porfirio Diaz closed.

During the succeeding eight years I held a number of newspaper jobs in Texas, all with nice titles—some of them were even engraved on cards furnished by the management—but the highest salary attached to any one of them was $50 a week. My most thrilling recollection of newspaper work in Texas centers around the hectic day in Austin when the Statesman, of which I was then editor, announced for the fifth or sixth successive week that salaries couldn't be paid. I had to carry a typewriter around the corner to a pawnbroker's shop and raise five dollars in a hurry because the washwoman had just brought the family's clothes home (so my wife informed me by telephone) and was waiting for her money.

I had written a few short stories from time to time and, oddly enough, sold all of them. The first I ever produced was published in Harper's Weekly about 1912, but short stories did not

Continued on page lxxxvi

Only one investor in twenty actually receives the entire yield from his securities

How 581 out of 612 investors discovered invisible and unsuspected losses

THE security holdings of 612 investors were analyzed recently by our Investment Service Department. These lists ranged in amount from $10,000 to $2,000,000. The greater number of them included between $50,000 and $150,000 of stocks and bonds.

Only 31 of these investors—about one in twenty—were actually receiving the entire income which their securities should have yielded. Even the experienced investor seldom takes full advantage of the earning power of his holdings. Invisible, unsuspected losses levy a toll upon the majority of investors.

Investing is more than buying and holding securities. Call features, conversion privileges, tax position, and proper diversification are only a few of the many details which investors often overlook. Such oversight means a needless sacrifice of income.

Now, more than at any time in the past fifteen years, careful management is urgent.

10% more yearly income from their securities

Few investors realize the value of careful management of securities—until scientific analysis and supervision have been applied to their holdings, and have brought the unnecessary losses to light.

In many of the cases where our Investment

Service Department reviewed investors' security holdings, and where the investor made use of our facilities for more effective control, there has been an increase of more than 10% in the yearly income from his securities. In other cases, improvements were made toward greater safety, reducing income with a view to forestalling future losses of larger amount than the temporary advantage of a high return.

How to avoid hidden losses

Certain facts brought to light by these analyses will be of timely value to the majority of investors. For that reason they have been condensed into a booklet, "Investment Strategy," which gives an interesting cross-section of the essentials of efficient investing, based on actual experience.

The ten principles of investment selection and security management outlined in this new booklet are designed to prevent the more costly errors of oversight found in a surprisingly high proportion of the 612 lists analyzed.

The investor owning $25,000 or more of securities will find "Investment Strategy" useful in avoiding the various hidden risks of investment loss, and in shaping his entire security program along sound, profitable lines.

We shall be glad to send you a copy of "Investment Strategy" upon request.

The Compton Investment Service Department, an outgrowth of forty years of experience, has proved of substantial value to investors. You are invited to make use of its facilities in the analysis of your own investment holdings.

WILLIAM R. COMPTON COMPANY

NEW YORK
44 Wall Street

Investment Securities

ST. LOUIS
Compton Bldg.

CHICAGO
105 So. La Salle St.

DETROIT
Ford Bldg.

NEW ORLEANS
Hibernia Bank Bldg.

CINCINNATI
Dixie Terminal Bldg.

KANSAS CITY
Dwight Bldg.

BOSTON
73 Water St.

LOS ANGELES LIMITED

NOTHING FINER ♦ NOTHING FASTER

Leaves Chicago
8:10 P. M. daily

Like a sojourn in a fine hotel—appointments and cuisine link luxury and high scenic diversion to make your 63-hour journey a pleasant means to the end—California! the year round playground out of doors. Los Angeles Limited* has barber, bath, valet, maid, manicure.

Seven other fine fast trains to California, including the 63-hour San Francisco Overland Limited*; Gold Coast Limited (Open-top observation car in Southern California); Continental Limited; Pacific Limited; Pacific Coast Limited.

*Extra fare trains.

See magnificent, mysterious Death Valley en route. Only $40.00 additional for all-expense two day side trips.

For booklets describing California, Death Valley and these fine trains:

Address C. J. Collins
General Passenger Agent
Dept. 175, Omaha, Neb.

UNION PACIFIC

THE OVERLAND ROUTE

lxxxvi

Editorial NOTES

Continued from page lxxxiv

appear to be an easy road to fortune. In 1920 I went to New York as adviser on Mexican affairs, serving a group of large corporations having interests in that country. For the first time I had a fair amount of leisure and no financial worries, so I resumed writing fiction, but I saw no reason for offering it to editors. Just to see my name in print did not excite me. When my work as adviser on Mexican affairs was completed I accepted with delight a berth as editorial writer for the old New York Evening Post.

But this heavenly berth didn't last long. The Evening Post was soon sold, and I landed on the sidewalk with no idea of which way to go. It occurred to me that I might open my private and personally produced library and offer a few manuscripts for sale. I took the half dozen stories on top and sent them out. I might have sent seven, but six exhausted the sheet of stamps I had purchased. All of the manuscripts were purchased. The Saturday Evening Post took three. One, "Margaret Blake," published in the Century, was awarded second prize in the O. Henry awards in 1924. This happy outcome seemed to me a fair indication of what I ought to do from there on and I did it. I'm still doing it.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY, since its establishment four years ago, has bought MSS. from 411 different authors, of whom seventy-seven have been women. Their places of nativity and present residence are shown in the following table:

	Born in	Living in
Alabama	12	12
Arizona	1	0
Arkansas	2	1
California	8	20
Colorado	0	0
Connecticut	5	10
Delaware	2	0
District of Columbia	6	22
Florida	2	1
Georgia	4	3
Idaho	1	0
Illinois	12	18
Indiana	10	3
Iowa	11	1
Kansas	9	4
Kentucky	8	0
Louisiana	2	1
Maine	4	1

Continued on page lxxxviii

NO MORE SELF-PUNISHMENT . . .

WHAT'S become of the idea that unless a thing was unpleasant it couldn't be good for you? Is the civilized world growing up?

No doubt ENO has played a more or less modest part in the new attitude toward life.

Consider for a moment. You're a victim of the old school. Everything you have to take tastes awful. Being sick is a double punishment. And when you feel merely off color, some helpful soul is sure to recommend a dose of "salts." Nothing else will do. The taste is terrible, and that, for some obscure reason, certifies that the effects will be very good indeed.

And then, one bright day, Eno comes into your life. You try a dash of it in water. The taste is delightful. Its sparkling effervescence stimulates your palate and cheers your heart. It's not a punishment, it's a pleasure. And you discover that its mild, gentle, grateful action is thorough beyond question!

After an experience like that no one could continue quite so sure that the good life must also be nauseatingly disagreeable.

Be odd—wouldn't it?—if Eno, in addition to saving endless unpleasantness, should have also influenced the course of human thought!

Eno, world-renowned for more than half a century, from all druggists, 75c and $1.25 a bottle. Prepared only by J. C. Eno, Ltd. Sales Agents: Harold F. Ritchie & Co.,

Inc., Belmont Building,
Madison Ave. at 34th Street,
New York.

flowers, sunny days and happy children playing out-of-doors make California
a paradise

Five trains are operated by the Santa Fe from Chicago and Kansas City to California daily —The Chief, The California Limited, The Navajo, The Scout, The Missionary. A whole tribe of trains crossing the Indian country of the Southwest. All of them famous trains. And chief of them all, The Chief—extra fine—extra fast—extra fare. Fred Harvey dining service all the way. Remember Grand Canyon and the Indian-detour.

After California—Hawaii

Mail coupon

W. J. Black, Pass. Traf. Mgr., Santa Fe System Lines
1001 Railway Exchange, Chicago, Illinois

Am interested in winter trip to California. Send me free picture-folders and advise cost of excursion ticket.

Name

Address

Editorial NOTES

Continued from page lxxxvi

	Born in	Living in
Maryland	9	12
Massachusetts	20	18
Michigan	10	6
Minnesota	5	3
Mississippi	4	2
Missouri	10	2
Montana	3	4
Nebraska	4	1
Nevada	1	0
New Hampshire	4	3
New Jersey	8	4
New Mexico	2	4
New York { City	17	134
Rest of State	46	36
North Carolina	5	1
North Dakota	0	0
Ohio	21	8
Oklahoma	7	11
Oregon	5	14
Pennsylvania	26	12
Rhode Island	5	3
South Carolina	4	1
South Dakota	4	0
Tennessee	1	1
Texas	10	8
Utah	1	0
Vermont	4	0
Virginia	9	6
Washington	1	6
West Virginia	0	0
Wisconsin	1	0
Wyoming	0	0
Philippines	1	1
Porto Rico	1	0
Austria	3	1
Belgium	1	0
Canada	8	3
Chile	1	0
Czecho-Slovakia	1	0
Denmark	1	0
England	14	5
France	3	15
Germany	9	3
Holland	1	0
Ireland	5	0
Italy	1	1
Japan	2	0
Norway	1	0
Rumania	1	0
Russia	10	0
Scotland	1	0
Sweden	1	0
Yugo-Slavia	1	0

Continued on page xc

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

For Christmas

Give Fragrance

A gift of fragrance at Christmas is more than just a present; for the fragrances of Christmas are inseparable from its sentiment. In every recurring breath of a favored perfume is a sweet memory of the giver and the occasion.

The fragrant Gift Boxes and Perfumes of Roger & Gallet, Paris, are especially appropriate as Christmas gifts. The boxes contain selections of several most desirable toilet articles. They are works of art in fragrance and ultra-modern French in color and design. Three sizes, varying in number and size of the toilet articles contained. Priced from $6 to $12.

Offered in the fragrances of

Pavots d'Argent

SILVER POPPIES

Le Jade

The Precious Perfume

Fleurs d'Amour

FLOWERS OF LOVE

Single articles of fragrance in each of these perfumes – in Extrait, Eau de Toilette, Poudre, Compact, Savon, Bath Salts (Tablets), Afterbath Powder, Talcum. Each in an attractive gift box – priced from $1 to $12.50.

ROGER & GALLET
Parfumeurs
PARIS - NEW YORK

Your favorite shop will be glad to show
you Roger & Gallet's fragrant gifts.

Le Jade

Fleurs d'Amour

Pavots d'Argent

Le Jade
"THE PRECIOUS PERFUME"

Fleurs d'Amour
"FLOWERS OF LOVE"

Pavots d'Argent
"SILVER POPPIES"

lxxxix

Native Life in Curaçao . . .

... On the Cunard West Indies Cruise

Packed with native drama . . . sun-tinted vermillion walls . . . glimpses into courts smothered in bougainvillea . . . Shop for good things on a January morning . . . shawls . . . rare liqueurs . . . an armful of hibiscus . . .

14 other semi-tropical ports . . . Fort de France in Martinique . . . La Guayra and the road to Caracas . . . a piece of engineering magic . . . San Juan . . . Port au Prince . . . the brooding romance of Morro Castle at Havana . . . the far-flung fame of "Sloppy Joe's" cafe . . . 31 days of the most extraordinary tropical kaleidoscope this side of Suez . . .

And the ship . . . decks as white as a patio in a Spanish villa . . . an intimate, charming stateroom . . . the kind you would covet for yourself in a house in Connecticut . . . or in a Devonshire cottage . . . The smart atmosphere of a Piccadilly club all over the ship . . . It's CUNARD. Apply to local agents or 25 Broadway, New York.

FRANCONIA—15 days—
From N. Y. Dec. 20 $200 up
CALIFORNIA—31 days—
From N. Y. Jan. 21 and Feb. 25 . . $300 up

CUNARD-ANCHOR West Indies Cruises

XC

Editorial NOTES

Continued from page lxxxviii

As will be noted, THE AMERICAN MERCURY has printed contributions by natives of every American State save Colorado, North Dakota, West Virginia and Wyoming, and residents of every State save Arizona, Colorado, Delaware, Idaho, Kentucky, Nevada, North Dakota, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin and Wyoming. Its contributors have included fifty-eight natives of foreign countries and two natives of the insular possessions of the United States.

The foregoing table, like those that follow, shows a few unavoidable omissions. It has been impossible, in all cases, to establish the nativity of contributors, and in some even their present places of residence are uncertain. In the following table the occupations of contributors are given:

Anthropologists	2
Architects	3
Army officers	6
Assessor	1
Bacteriologist	1
Barber	1
Biologist	1
Botanist	1
Business men	20
Chemists	2
Clergymen	3
Dentists	2
Dermatologist	1
Editorial secretary	1
Editors	12
Ethnologists	2
Explorer	1
Farmers	2
Genealogist	1
Geographer	1
High-school principal	1
Historian	1
Hobo	1
Housewives	3
Journalists	60
Lawyers	9
Librarians	7
Linotype operator	1
Medical instructor	1

Continued on page xcii

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

"It's Fun to keep Fit this new Way"

Wm. Wrigley, Jr.

KEEN business men realize the importance of keeping fit. They know the right kind of exercise is absolutely imperative. Wm. Wrigley, Jr., speaking about the Battle Creek Health Builder, says: "I have one of your 'Health Builder' machines in each of my four homes. I use this machine never less than half an hour a day and I am in a perfect physical shape."

Keep physically fit—radiantly healthy! You can now exercise and massage your whole body in this surprisingly simple new way right in your own home—without any effort. Thousands are doing it.

Oscillate Your Way to Health

THE rapidly oscillating girdles of the Health Builder give a combined massage-vibratory treatment better than a skilled masseur. No electric current touches you. The Health Builder vigorously massages the heaviest muscles, peeps up sluggish circulation, aids digestion and elimination, strengthens muscle "tone" and improves the functions of the internal organs.

Over 50,000 men and women of all ages have used the "Health Builder" for health improvement upon the recommendation of their physicians! Used daily in countless private homes, large medical institutions, athletic clubs, gymnasiums, ocean liners, and by numerous physicians in their practice.

Send for "Keeping Fit in 15 Minutes a Day"—a valuable Free Book showing the "Battle Creek Health Builder" in operation—with complete series of home exercises, Sanitarium Equipment Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Health Builder

The Battle Creek Sun Arc Bath and "Mechanical Health Horse" are also made by the manufacturers of the famous "Health Builder."

Keeps You Fit

SANITARIUM EQUIPMENT CO.
Room S2736 Battle Creek, Mich.

Please send me FREE Book "Keeping Fit"—Today.

Name.....

Address.....

City..... State.....

—and giving
the pipe-smoker
a new thrill.

Why not take pity on that pipe-smoking friend who does not know the ecstasy of smoking CRAVEN MIXTURE? For Christmas send him an imported gift—a couple of tins of CRAVEN MIXTURE—that deliciously mild, wondrously fragrant tobacco—the choice of discriminating smokers for over sixty years.

You can now buy CRAVEN MIXTURE at better tobacconists everywhere. Or for a liberal sample, send 10c in stamps to CARRERAS, LTD., Dept. 21, 210 Fifth Ave., New York.

Craven

MIXTURE

Imported from London

Across the Atlantic

ENGLAND · FRANCE · IRELAND · GERMANY

Hamburg-American Line

Eighty years of progressive experience in rendering service to discriminating travelers. Now a fleet of new and splendid steamers—some de luxe liners with first, second, and improved Third Class accommodations. Other comfortable liners for Cabin and improved Third Class exclusively. All modern oil burners.

Around the World

S. S. RESOLUTE

Sailing Eastward from New York

Jan. 7, 1928 - 140 days

30 countries - 63 cities

Rates: $2000 up.

To the West Indies

S. S. RELIANCE

Dec. 17, Jan. 7 and Mar. 28

15 or 16 days—$200 up.

Jan. 25 and Feb. 25

27 days—$300 up.

HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE

UNITED AMERICAN LINES, INC., General Agents

28 Broadway, New York, Branches in Boston Chicago Philadelphia San Francisco

Or Local Steamship or Tourist Agents

Editorial NOTES

Continued from page xc

Meteorologists	2
Miner	1
Music critics	4
Naval officer	1
Physicians	12
Playwrights	2
Prisoners	2
Professors	38
Public utility executive	1
Sanitarian	1
Scenic designer	1
Senator	1
Social workers	3
Sociologist	1
Statistician	1
Teachers	9
Typographer	1
Writers	200

The preponderance of editors, journalists and other professional writers, noted last year, continues. But it will also be noted that the contributors to the magazine during the past four years have likewise included many business men, lawyers, medical men, and professors. The specialties professed by the professors are given in the following table:

Anthropology	1
Biology	2
Chemistry	1
Economics	1
English	15
History	9
Industrial medicine	1
Law	2
Mathematics	1
Music	1
Philosophy	2
Sociology	1

The occupations of the women who have contributed to the magazine follow:

Business women	4
Editorial secretary	1
Ethnologist	1
Housewives	3
Librarian	1
Writers	52

Continued on page xciv

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

"C A R R Y I N G O N"

THE "BBB Own Make" Pipe holds a place in history, and in the hearts of history's makers. From Manchester to Melbourne—from Halifax to Hong Kong—Englishmen have seen in its smoke, visions of empire—and of home's green hedgerows † † Now, WDC have acquired the exclusive right to produce this fine pipe in America. Theirs to "carry on" the old BBB Individual Baking Process which has for generations made "BBB Own Make" the sweetest, most satisfying of pipes.

† † † †

The "BBB Own Make" Pipe is now available in a variety of shapes at the establishments of better tobacconists. $5 the pipe—plain or ripple briars. Wm. Demuth & Co., 230 Fifth Ave., New York City

xciii

relieve rheumatic pain

rub in Absorbine Jr.

THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

At all DRUGGISTS $1.25
Send for free trial bottle
W.F. YOUNG, Inc., Springfield, Mass.

Clark's Famous Cruises

By CUNARD-ANCHOR new oil burners; rates include hotels, guides, drives, fees.

65 DAYS, $600 to $1700
THE MEDITERRANEAN
ss "Transylvania," sailing Jan. 25

24th cruise, including Madeira, Lisbon (Madrid), Spain (Granada), Algiers, Tunis, Carthage, Athens, Constantinople, 15 days Palestine and Egypt, the Riviera, Cherbourg (Paris), Glasgow. Europe stop-over.

8th World Cruise (Westward)

Jan. 16, New York, and Feb. 2, Los Angeles;
4th Norway Cruise, June 30; 52 days, $600 to $1,300
125 days, $1,250 to $3,000.

FRANK C. CLARK, Times Bldg., N. Y.

The New Books

of all publishers are announced in this issue of

The American Mercury

xciv

Editorial NOTES

Continued from page xcii

Newspaper women	8
Physician	1
Professors	2
Social workers	2
Teachers	2

The following protest against "Age and the Farmer," in "Clinical Notes" for October, comes from a reader in the great State of Missouri:

My residence in the Ozark wilderness is of such recent origin that I do not feel that I am unduly prejudiced by my surroundings, yet I marvel frequently at the youth and stamina of old-timers who would have succumbed years ago to arterio-sclerosis or something had fate interned them in a big city.

My principal mentor is a nearby neighbor, sixty-four years old. He has a considerable estate, but chooses to work it himself, and few younger men care to follow his pace. He is a pillar of the Baptist church, and our main point of social contact is recounting smutty stories; in intelligence he is on a par with the average Wall Street broker; in sophistication he is greatly like a twelve-year-old city boy—it's been a hearsay acquisition. Yet he enjoys an eyeful of feminine pulchritude quite as much as the most confirmed musical show patron, and don't let them kid you into thinking there are no Follies girls in yokel-land. Why, that's where most of them come from. The girls out here wear just as few clothes, just as short hair and just as much complexion aid as their respective classes do in Gotham.

The modern yokel hears via radio and phonograph the same music as your urban audiences. I imagine the average taste is quite as discriminating. Homebrew is abundant and there is certainly no need of imbibing from a dirty jug.

I don't mean to picture the yokel as possessing culture; God knows he lacks it quite as badly as most shirtwaist manufacturers. But in his own way he enjoys life quite as sanely as city Babbitts. Of course, we rubes do neglect our personal appearance; I deem it a luxury to miss shaving occasionally. What of it? Who cares? Health and vigor are surely not lowered by such neglect.

Hard toil brings on age whether in city or country but take it from me, the principal trouble with the farmers today is their aversion to sustained effort. They simply don't stick to that daylight to dark stuff any more.

North Africa of Sunshine and Splendour

Minarets flinging their thin spires in the blue...glittering mosques and mosaiced palaces. Golden splendours...haunting beauty. Bizarre...fantastic. Crooked narrow streets...where strange perfumes linger...every doorway breathing mystery. Flaunting, shrilling souks piled high with exotic gaud and treasure. Oases carved in jade...shimmering dreamlike in the desert gold. Caravans and dancing girls...sinuous Arabs and the savage blue-veiled silent ones...tempestuous...primitive...glorious North Africa!

From one enchantment to another...luxurious motor cars speed you over flowing macadam roads or the thin winding trails of the desert. The forty-one famous Transatlantique hotels welcome you with their Parisian cuisine and service their brilliant Continental gayety. ☞ De luxe itinerary...57 gorgeously coloured days...all expenses...Mediterranean crossing...hotels...private automobile...$1750. ☞ Shorter trips...such as 10-day itinerary...$200.

Romance...glamour...a mere step from the prosaic...over "the longest gangplank in the world." Calling at Plymouth, England...then Le Havre de Paris. The gangplank leads to the waiting boat train...three hours...Paris. Overnight...the Riviera. A day across the Mediterranean, North Africa.

French Line

Information from any French Line Agent or Tourist Office, or write direct to 19 State Street, New York City

KCV

The Merry Cruise to the Mediterranean
 PALESTINE EGYPT
 By the famous
 "Rotterdam"
 7th Cruise
 Leaving New York
 February 2, 1928
Under the Holland-America Line's own management
The
 "ROTTERDAM"
 24,170 tons register
 37,190 tons displ.

Has a world-wide reputation for the magnificence and comfort of her appointments, the surpassing excellence of her cuisine and the high standards of service and management on board.

71 Days of Delightful Diversion
 ITINERARY includes Madeira, Cadiz, Seville, (Granada) Gibraltar, Algiers, Naples (first call), Tunis, Athens, Constantinople, Beirut, Haifa, Jerusalem (the Holy Land), Alexandria, Cairo (and Egypt), Cattaro, Ragusa, Venice, Naples (second call), Monaco, and the Riviera. Carefully planned shore excursions in charge of American Express Co. Stopover in Europe if desired. For Choice selection of accommodations make reservations now. Cost of Cruise $955 up. Number of guests limited. Illustrated Folder "A.M." on request to

HOLLAND-AMERICA LINE
 21-24 State Street, New York

Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Detroit, Atlanta, Ga., Seattle, New Orleans, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Mexico City, Montreal, Winnipeg. Or any authorized Steamship Agent.

Other
 1928 Luxury Cruises
WEST INDIES
 by the superb oil
 burning S.S. VEENDAM AFRICA South AMERICA
 EGYPT, EUROPE
 by superb oil burning
 S.S. VEENDAM

Check List of NEW BOOKS

*Continued from front advertising section,
 page 1*

BIOGRAPHY: The Literature of Personality.

By James C. Johnston.

The Century Company

$2.50

7 1/4 x 5 1/4; 312 pp.

New York

It quickly becomes manifest that Mr. Johnston has nothing novel or apposite to say about his subject. His thoughts upon biography are those that might be expected to occur to any somewhat literary school-ma'm. At the end he presents a series of definitions that are mainly obvious, and sometimes childish.

THREE WOMEN POETS OF MODERN JAPAN.

Translated by Glenn Hughes and Yozan T. Iwasaki.

The University of Washington Chapbooks

65 cents

7 1/4 x 5 1/4; 43 pp.

Seattle

The poets whose work is here translated are Akiko Yosano, Akiko Yanagiwara, and Takeko Kujo. A biographical and critical note is prefaced to each selection, and there is a general introduction. Mr. Hughes is assistant professor of English at the University of Washington, and Mr. Iwasaki is founder and director of the Japanese Theatre in Seattle.

REPRINTS

IN THE MIDST OF LIFE.

By Ambrose Bierce.

The Modern Library

95 cents

6 3/4 x 4 1/4; 403 pp.

New York

SELECTED PAPERS OF BERTRAND RUSSELL.

Selected by Bertrand Russell.

The Modern Library

95 cents

6 3/4 x 4 1/4; 390 pp.

New York

The Bierce collection of short stories has an introduction by the late George Sterling, which was the last piece of writing he did. There is nothing in it that is new as fact, but it has importance as the last tribute to one of the true masters of American literature by his most beloved disciple. As for the Russell book, it is very difficult to imagine how it could be any better. It forms an excellent introduction to the writings of one of the most intelligent men alive.

CREATIVE EDUCATION.

By Henry Fairfield Osborn.

Charles Scribner's Sons

$2.50

7 1/4 x 5 1/4; 360 pp.

New York

This is a collection of stray educational papers, some of them having been first published so long ago as 1893. Professor Osborn is a scientist of the first water, but when he wanders into more speculative fields of thought he sometimes becomes a bit tiresome. There is very little in the present book that is new in thought or fresh in expression.

Continued on page xcvi

THE MUSICAL FORUM of NEW YORK

KURT SCHINDLER, Musical Director

Announces

SEVEN SUNDAY EVENINGS OF MUSIC

At the

GUILD THEATRE

245 W. 52d St., New York City

Nov. 20-27 Dec. 18

Jan. 8-22 Feb. 12-26

The artists for this series include

MARIO CORTI IVAN DNEPROF
 ANNA DUNCAN THE ENGLISH SINGERS
 OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH NINA KOSHETZ
 MARIO KURENKO WANDA LANDOWSKA
 BENNO MOISEWITSCH ELIZABETH RETHBERG
 ANDRES SEGOVIA

SUBSCRIPTIONS CAN BE OBTAINED AT RECITAL MANAGEMENT

ARTHUR JUDSON 113 West 57th St., N. Y. City (KNABE PIANO)

Frank's Mediterranean

6th Annual Cruise De Luxe

Cunard S. S. "Scythia"—Sailing from New York Jan. 25, 1928

Fascinating Africa, mysterious Egypt, the Holy Land, beautiful Madeira, gay Seville, Granada with its Alhambra, mighty Gibraltar, ancient Cadiz, Algiers, Biskra, Timgad, Tunis, Malta, Dardanelles, Constantinople, Bosphorus, Athens, Venice, Florence, Rome, Naples, Messina, Taormina, Syracuse, Palermo, Monte Carlo, France, England—the glorious Cruise of the palatial Cunarder "Scythia" will take you to all of these wonderful places, and many others. We have exclusively chartered this magnificent steamer, with membership limited to 395 guests—half capacity.

The Cruise of the "Scythia" is the annual Mediterranean classic. The unusually large and comfortable cabins—all with hot and cold running water—the suites and private baths, the spacious decks, the passenger elevators, the famous Cunard cuisine and service and the reasonable rates, all combine to offer the most attractive of all Cruises to the Mediterranean.

Free stop-over in Europe, including return by S. S. "Berengaria," "Aquitania," "Mauretania" or any Cunard steamer.

Prompt reservation advisable. Full information on request. Apply to

FRANK TOURIST CO. [Est. 1875] 542 Fifth Ave., New York

Philadelphia, 1529 Locust St. Chicago, 175 North Michigan Ave. Boston, 33 Devonshire St.
San Francisco, 582 Market St. Los Angeles, 756 So. Broadway

WEST INDIES
Cruises
De Luxe
Jan., Feb., Mch.
Palatial
S. S. "VEENDAM"

National Union
Mortgage Bonds

The STANDARD of comparison in Mortgage Bonds

EMBODYING every feature of protection which experience has suggested, including the guarantee of underlying mortgages by one of the four following Surety Companies:

U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., Baltimore
Maryland Casualty Co., Baltimore
Fidelity & Deposit Co., Baltimore
National Surety Co., New York

These Bonds possess the essential requirements of an ideal investment

NATIONAL UNION MORTGAGE CO.
MACKUBIN, GOODRICH & CO.
FISCAL AGENTS
Established 1899

111 E. REDWOOD STREET BALTIMORE, MARYLAND

Health Belongs to Go-Getters!

Health is physical success. Some of the healthiest specimens in the world didn't have any health at all to begin with. They simply went out and got it! and Atlantic City is the greatest spot on earth to find it. It's just a gold mine of energy and exhilaration—and if you add the indoor-sea-pool bathing, the comforts, the luxuries, and the fine eating at The Ambassador, you have a combination that'll put you right up on your toes!

Write or Wire for Reservations

The Ambassador
ATLANTIC CITY

Check List of NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xcvi

THE GOOD GRAY POET.

By William Douglas O'Connor.

Henry S. Saunders

$2 7½ x 5; 75 pp.

Toronto

O'Connor first published "The Good Gray Poet" in 1866, after Whitman had been thrown out of his clerkship in Washington by the immortal ass, James Harlan, then Secretary of the Interior, but formerly a Methodist preacher. The pamphlet was reprinted in Dr. R. M. Bucke's "Walt Whitman," somewhat revised, in 1883. The latter text is here followed, and there is an introduction by O'Connor's widow, written in 1911. (She died in 1913). The book was hand-set by the publisher, who has a private press in Toronto, and is issued in an edition of but 125 copies. There is a frontispiece portrait of O'Connor.

JEAN-CHRISTOPHE.

By Romain Rolland.

Henry Holt & Company

$5 8 x 5¼; 504 pp.

New York

The three volumes of "Jean-Christophe" are here reprinted as one. They run to more than 1000 pages and the book weighs two-and-a-half pounds. The paper is thin but very opaque, and so the text is completely legible. The preface to the first volume, by Gilbert Cannan, the translator, is prefaced to the whole. So printed, its opening is somewhat confusing, for it seems to refer to the whole work.

CASTLES IN SPAIN And Other Screeds.

By John Galsworthy.

Charles Scribner's Sons

$2 7¾ x 5¼; 263 pp.

New York

This is a collection of fugitive literary essays, some of them having been first published as far back as 1903. Their character is indicated by the chapter titles, among which are "Reminiscences of Conrad," "Books as Ambassadors," "A Note on Sentiment," and "Faith of a Novelist."

THE STORY OF A COUNTRY TOWN.

By E. W. Howe.

Dodd, Mead & Company

$3.50 9 x 6; 361 pp.

New York

THE POETRY AND PROSE OF BLAKE.

Edited by Geoffrey Keynes.

The Random House

$5 8 x 4¾; 1152 pp.

New York

The Howe classic was first published in 1882, and since then has gone through over 100 editions. The present edition is made from entirely new plates. There is a foreword by the author, relating how nearly all the big publishers first turned the book down and then, after Howells' review of it in the old Century, walked over one another in the struggle to get it back. The Blake reprint contains all of his writings and a few reproductions of his illustrations. It is printed on India paper and is superbly and durably bound.

Continued on page c

Editorial Approval

In the October issue of this little Outlet for Egos, there is an article by Frederick Bausman entitled, amusingly enough, "Under Which Flag". For anyone having the mad ambition to be a successful contributor to the Mercury, we recommend a careful reading of this illuminating instance of editorial approval.

Even a casual reading will disclose the easiest way to arouse Mr. Mencken's attention. You must write well, of course, but if you bring out the feeling expressed in either "Under Which Flag" or "Notes for a Comic History", by George Seibel in the same issue, you should certainly get in. In our opinion, inaccuracies, exaggerations, or misinformation will not be a handicap.

We ask Mr. Mencken if he will admit that "Under Which Flag" reeks of racial prejudice.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL CO.
St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A.

P. S. We must get Listerine into this ad somehow. Perhaps we can cover the requirement by telling you that Listerine, the safe antiseptic, is almost fifty years old and is on sale in every foreign country, including Germany

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

Schools & Colleges

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF DRAMATIC ARTS

Founded 1884 by Franklin H. Sargent

The foremost institution for Dramatic and Expressional Training. The instruction of the Academy furnishes the essential preparation for Directing and Teaching as well as for Acting. The training is educative and practical, developing Poise, Personality and Expressional Power, of value to those in professional life and to the layman.

Midwinter Term Opens January 16th
Extension Dramatic Courses in co-operation with
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
Free Catalog describing all Courses from Room 255-L, CARNEGIE HALL, New York

SOUTHERN COLLEGE "In the Heart of Virginia."
Established 1863.
Junior College, Finishing or High School Courses. Music, Art, Expression, Dom. Sci., Secretarial. Golf, Swimming, Tennis, Gymnastics, Dramatics. 65th year. Country Club Privileges. Historical Tours. Riding Lessons. College Clubs. Fixed Rate.
ARTHUR KYLE DAVIS 280 College Place, Petersburg, Va.

EARN PROMOTION AND COLLEGE CREDIT

through the
HOME-STUDY COURSES
in 40 different subjects given by
The University of Chicago
217 Ellis Hall, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

SHORT STORY WRITING

Particulars of Dr. Esenwein's famous forty-lesson course in writing and marketing of the Short-Story and sample copy of THE WRITER'S MONTHLY free. Write today.
THE HOME CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL
Dept. 98 Springfield, Mass.

All Standard Makes TYPEWRITERS at new low prices

Get your favorite machine at a saving of 40% to 60%. Latest models Underwoods, Royals, L. C. Smiths, Remingtons, remanufactured like new from top to bottom. 5-year guarantee. 10 days free trial. Sold direct on EZ monthly payments. Write for latest catalog—FREE.

YOUNG TYPEWRITER COMPANY, 654 W. Randolph St.
Typewriter Headquarters Dept. 625C Chicago

REAL HARRIS TWEED

The aristocrat of all sports wear—direct from makers. Patterns free. Cut lengths by post. Carriage paid.
NEWALL, 141 Stornoway, Scotland

IMPROVED LARGE YORKSHIRE SWINE

Promising progeny of a recent importation from Prince Edward Islands now offered as Foundation stock or for rejuvenating established herds. Boars and gilts that fully conform to Yorkshire standards, some as low as $75.00.
PERRY W. KISER Cromwell, Indiana

Check List of NEW BOOKS

Continued from page xcvi

PROUDHON'S SOLUTION OF THE SOCIAL PROBLEM.

Edited by Henry Cohen.

The Vanguard Press

50 cents

7 1/4 x 4 1/2; 225 pp.

New York

The body of this book is made up of extracts from the writings of Proudhon, but there are also included two essays on the man and his ideas, by Charles A. Dana, of the old New York Sun, and William B. Green, a Massachusetts Unitarian-idealist, who lived in the first three quarters of the last century.

THE THEATRE

THE ART OF THEATRE-GOING.

By John Drinkwater.

The Houghton Mifflin Company

$3

8 1/2 x 5 1/2; 217 pp.

Boston

THE THEATRE.

By Stark Young.

The George H. Doran Company

$1.50

7 x 4 1/2; 182 pp.

New York

Both of these books are made up of short essays on the elements of the theatre, and neither has much to say. Of the two Mr. Young's is the more interesting, but every now and then he goes off in clouds of metaphysical rubbish.

THE BEST PLAYS OF 1926-1927.

Edited by Burns Mantle.

Dodd, Mead & Company

$3

8 1/4 x 5 1/2; 563 pp.

New York

Like its seven predecessors this is a valuable book. It is an excellent record of the doings in the past theatrical year in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Southern California. The plays reprinted are the following: "Broadway," by Philip Dunning and George Abbott; "Saturday's Children," by Maxwell Anderson; "Chicago," by Maurine Watkins; "The Constant Wife," by W. Somerset Maugham; "The Road to Rome," by Robert Emmett Sherwood; "The Play's the Thing," by Ferenc Molnar; "The Silver Chord," by Sidney Howard; "The Cradle Song," by Gregorio and Maria Martinez Sierra; "Daisy Mayme," by George Kelly; and "In Abraham's Bosom," by Paul Green.

EIGHT EUROPEAN PLAYS.

Selected by Winifred Karzin.

Brentano's

$3.50

8 3/4 x 5 3/4; 526 pp.

New York

The eight contemporary French, Italian and German plays included in this volume are "Glamour" and "Martine" by Jean-Jacques Bernard; "The Stairs," by Rosso di San Secondo; "Fire in the Opera House," by Georg Kaiser; "The Nuremberg Egg," by Walter Harlan; "Madame Legros," by Heinrich Mann; "A Place in the World," by Carl Sternheim; and "Uncle's Been Dreaming," by Karl Vollmöller. The translations are by Miss Katzin and Barrett H. Clark.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

PHOTO BY T. C. WOOD, JR.

ON Monday, January 2nd, 1928, the doors of Useppa Inn will open for another delightful season. Old friends will gather from the North and West. Old rivalries will be renewed on the links, on the tennis courts, and on the waters of the Bay. New trophies will be competed for and won. The biggest tarpon of the year will once more be weighed-in on the pier. When vacancies permit us we are happy to enlarge the circle of our friends. Detailed information will be gladly forwarded. Until December 20th, address Mr. J. F. Vallely, Manager, Useppa Inn, New York Office—220 West 42nd Street, and after that date—Useppa Inn, Useppa Island, Lee County, Florida.

ci

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

Vol. XII

No. 48

DECEMBER 1927

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

This issue completes the twelfth volume.

We shall be glad to bind each volume of four numbers in figured Batik boards, reinforced buckram back and corners and a green label, for $2.75.

Send your magazines and check to Binding Department

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

730 Fifth Avenue, New York.

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912 of THE AMERICAN MERCURY published monthly at Camden, N. J., for October, 1927

State of New York } ss.
County of New York }

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and county aforesaid, personally appeared Samuel Knopf, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he is the Business Manager of The American Mercury and that the following is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership management, etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in section 443, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are:
Publisher, Alfred A. Knopf 730 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.
Editor, Henry L. Mencken 730 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.
Business Manager, Samuel Knopf 730 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

2. That the owner is: The American Mercury, Inc. (Owner)
Stockholders—Samuel Knopf, 815 Park Avenue, New York, N. Y.; Alfred A. Knopf, 1148 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.; Blanche W. Knopf, 1148 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.; Henry L. Mencken, 1524 Hollins Street, Baltimore, Md.; George Jean Nathan, 44 West 44th Street, New York, N. Y.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent or more or total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.)
None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by him.

SAMUEL KNOPF,
(Business Manager)

Sworn and subscribed before me this 21st day of September, 1927.
[SEAL] JOSEPH C. LESSER,

Notary Public, Kings Co., No. 378, Reg. No. 9030
Certificate filed in N. Y. Co., No. 33, Reg. No. 9040

My commission expires March 30, 1929.

cii

There's a thrill of satisfaction
when you buy
Christmas Seals

The National, State, and Local Tuberculosis Associations of the United States

Sui generis

If you want a magazine like THE AMERICAN MERCURY, you must buy
THE AMERICAN MERCURY.

There is no other like it.

No doubt this explains why the circulation has doubled and redoubled.

ANNOUNCEMENT

HOTEL CHARLOTTE HARBOR, a delightful modern hostelry in an unexploited natural beauty spot 40 hours from New York and 45 hours from Chicago by through Pullman, opens Monday, January 2, 1928.

The Charlotte Harbor is one of the most beautifully appointed hotels in the South and each of its 200 large rooms has a bath and faces Charlotte Harbor. The features are golf, fishing, quail shooting, boating, bathing and tennis.

The Hotel is at the intersection of the Tamiami Trail and the Dixie Highway, and new hard surfaced roads spread in all directions. There are fireproof garage accommodations for motorists.

HOTEL
CHARLOTTE HARBOR
PUNTA GORDA
FLORIDA

Complete information sent on request. Address the Hotel direct.

Will You Be The 10th Man To Sit At This Board Table?

How nine famous business authorities can make profits for you.

FIRST, allow Mr. B. C. Forbes to introduce these world famous business authorities:

1. Mr. B. C. FORBES, Chairman
2. Mr. JAMES H. RAND, Jr., Executive Manager
3. Mr. ROGER W. BABSON, Economist
4. Mr. HERBERT N. CASSON, Sales Manager
5. Mr. JOHN MOODY, Financial Adviser
6. Mr. HOMER J. BUCKLEY, Mail Order Manager
7. Mr. WM. R. BASSETT, Industrial Engineer
8. Mr. WM. L. FLETCHER, Personnel Manager
9. Mr. THOMAS DREIER, Good-Will Manager
10. YOURSELF?

You may now take the Chair. The opportunity is YOURS to bring before these gentlemen the particular problems which you have to solve.

They will be YOUR problems. And their solution will be YOUR solution. Can you imagine a business situation that one of these business experts is not able to cope with from the storehouse of knowledge and successful achievement that is his.

You can have the services of these men, in the records of their lives, their actual achievements and business secrets at your elbow twenty-four hours a day.

Consider what this means.

Here in Forbes' Business Library, the greatest of its kind ever prepared, you can find the solution of how to turn your pennies into dollars and failure into success.

But that is not all. You can have this remarkable Business Library sent to your home or office, AT NO COST TO YOU. Read them, study them, and apply them at your leisure. If you can't see how they will help to increase profits and decrease expenses, just return them and it has not cost you a red penny.

Read Our Special Combination Offer

FORBES' MAGAZINE, published twice a month, is read by over 57,000 business men. On the news-stand it sells for 25 cents, or $6 per year.

For a limited time only, you may receive the 12-volume FORBES' BUSINESS LIBRARY handsomely bound in cloth and gold stamped, and a 3-year subscription to FORBES' MAGAZINE, at a total combined cost of $18, which is the cost at the news-stands of FORBES'

MAGAZINE alone. In other words, this 12-volume set will cost you ABSOLUTELY NOTHING.

You may have BOTH the Magazine and the 12 volumes sent to your home or office ON APPROVAL. You may inspect them for five days and, if you are satisfied, send us only $3—the balance in five equal monthly payments of $3 each. There is nothing more to pay. If you decide otherwise, just return the books at our expense.

Send No Money. Mail Coupon NOW!

CLIP AND MAIL THIS FREE OFFER

B. C. FORBES' MAGAZINE, A1
120 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

All right. Send me the 12 volumes of FORBES' BUSINESS LIBRARY. I will either return them at your expense, without further obligation to me, within five days, or I will remit $3 initial payment and $3 a month for five months thereafter. This will be full payment for the books and also FORBES' MAGAZINE for 3 years — 72 issues.

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
TOWN _____ STATE _____

The Borzoi Broadside

Published almost every month by ALFRED A. KNOPF, 730 Fifth Avenue, New York

VOS DONATUROS SALUTAMUS:

A HOLIDAY DIRECTORY

THE age is gone gun-shy in respect to advertising; and it is especially inclined to flippancy on the subject of holiday gifts and the "department-store Christmas" that now flourishes pestilentially through the twelfth part of each year. And no wonder! For the latter-day December is a time when specious moralistic-sentimental essays on the beauty of giving, on the sacredness of childhood and of the home, appear as preludes to the announcements of commercial gentry who have things to sell, and who could not imaginably care so much about anything on earth as about the disposal of their wares on the hugest scale at the highest prices. The poor commoner, wrought upon by their beguilements, is shamed into buying till it hurts, for home, for country, and for bigger and better business. It is natural and wholly to his credit if he finds himself progressively adopting a conscious cynicism as the only possible retort to the unconscious cynicism of his tormentors.

With what face, at such a time and for such exacerbated persons, is a publisher to recommend his productions? Is not he too engaged in trade? Must he not, by the nature of things, buy in a cheaper to sell in a dearer market, with a margin of profit? Does he not put out articles "for the holiday trade," and would he not undergo disappointment and loss if he could not succeed in vending these articles? How, then, can he claim exemption from the charge of that commercialism that has turned the modern holiday season into a by-word among the intelligent? Wherein are his wares either superior or different?

Well—to speak directly pro domo—we think we are in a position to make some headway against the cynical interpretation. We have, to begin with, a name (known, we trust, to readers of The Borzoi Broadside) for saying what we mean—for selling our wares in terms of truthful description, rather than of misleading nonsense or ecstatic superlatives. We expect, then, to be believed by the public, by readers of literature, by you, when we solemnly affirm that in the entire stretch of the year 1927 we have made no book or set of books to serve as a gift, or to be the subject of a letter of thanks, or to lie impressively on a center-table, or to decorate some allotted inches of shelf-room, or to impress beholder or recipient. There is not such an item in our entire catalogue as a "gift-book" in the ordinary and opprobrious sense; and when, lately, we issued a booklet about some new editions of established books specially suitable for either keeping or giving, we instinctively named this booklet, not "Holiday Books," not "Books—the Ideal Gift," but simply "The Proof of Permanence."* Our point is that a book, to be at all good for Christmas when no one has time to read, must be twice as good for all other times.

We are publishing sound writing by writers who want to be read, and we are trying to make the physical volumes enlist the resources of the designer, the typographer, the binder, in the service of one thing only—the intrinsic readability of the writing. If our volumes are beautiful—and we

* Supplied without cost on application to the publisher.

CONTENTS

VOS DONATUROS SALUTAMUS
WHICH BOOK FOR WHOM?
LASTING WORKS OF THE IMAGINATION
PERSONS WHO WERE PERSONAGES
IN LINE AND COLOR
FOR YOUNGSTERS
PERSONS AND PLACES
LIFE AND ITS MEANINGS TODAY
WITH RHYME AND RHYTHM
MUSIC AND ITS MAKERS
FORTIFIED BY TIME'S APPROVAL
"THE TRAPS IN WHICH EACH OF US IS CAUGHT"
LEST WE FORGET
OF WORLD-WIDE IMPORTANCE
AT THE LAST MINUTE
FINALLY

believe that the successful ones are—it is not because they are decorated by artifice: it is because their content is expressed in their form. Their appeal to the eye is implicitly a beguilement to the hand. We are aware of the profitableness of expensive books made to be sold to those who will never read them; but we have never aspired to that kind of profit. Our books are good to give away precisely because you always want to keep them yourself. All idealistic sentiment has agreed for ages and ages that the chief virtue of a gift resides in the generosity of the giver. Well, we are trying season by season to make the giving of Borzoi Books a real test of generosity; and we hereby issue fair warning that there are a good many of them which, as gifts, may cost you two prices—the second for the copy that you will insist upon living with.

So much is, you see, a kind of pledge. Let us add an even more specific clause to the pledge: We are not to mention in this long article the title of a single book which the publisher, as a matter of his personal taste, would not insist upon having in his library if it were under an entirely different imprint.

What follows without more ado is a sort of condensed selective directory of a few Borzoi Books, chiefly of 1927, which can be trusted to gratify certain specified tastes. Based on a first assumption that a lot of giving is going to be done this season, and on a second assumption that the right book is always the impeccable gift, it is an attempt to help you to reliable solutions of the infinitely delicate problem,

WHICH BOOK FOR WHOM?

Lasting Works of the Imagination

For everyone, without exception, who has the slightest taste for sound writing in the English language—including those who "don't read novels":

DEATH COMES FOR THE ARCHBISHOP. By WILLA CATHER, author of "One of Ours," "The Professor's House," etc. $2.50 net.

For every world-citizen with a mind—especially those who have outgrown ordinary fiction, sociology, and psychology:

THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN (DER ZAUBERBERG). By THOMAS MANN, author of "Buddenbrooks," "Royal Highness," etc. Translated by H. T. LOWE-PORTER. Two volumes boxed. $6.00 net.

For normal persons a little inclined to wonder why modern life has to be so hectic and unbalanced:

LOVE IS ENOUGH. By FRANCIS BRETT YOUNG, author of "The Dark Tower," "Sea Horses," and "Cold Harbour." Two volumes boxed. $5.00 net.

For everyone who is willing to face some American realities and who knows how to laugh without bitterness:

MATTOCK. By JAMES STEVENS, author of "Paul Bunyan" and "Braunyanman." $2.50 net.

For all intelligent enough to care about æsthetic theory, the form of the novel, and the deviosities of modern mental behavior:

THE COUNTERFEITERS. By ANDRÉ GIDE, author of "Strait Is the Gate," "Lafcadio's Adventures," etc. Translated by DOROTHY BUSSY. $3.00 net.

For devotees of Scott, Dumas, Sikiewicz, or any sort of costume romance with lots of thrilling action:

A PRINCE OF OUTLAWS (PRINCE SERÉBRYANY). By ALEXIS KONSTANTINOVICH TOLSTOY. Translated by CLARENCE AUGUSTUS MANNING. $3.00 net.

For persons inclined to a slightly sardonic or whimsical interpretation of the alleged miracles of religious history:

THE MIRACLE BOY. By LOUIS GOLDING, author of "Seacoast of Bohemia," "Day of Atonement," "Store of Ladies," etc. With interpretations in black and white by HERBERT GURSCHNER. $2.50 net.

For the reader who can thrill to a reading of the universal qualities of womanhood more searching and more honest than ordinary novels have accustomed him to, and who is disgusted with transience and triviality:

KRISTIN LAVRANSDATTER. By SIGRID UNDSET, author of "Jenny." Translated by CHARLES ARCHER and J. C. SCOTT. Three volumes ("The Bridal Wreath," "The Mistress of Husaby," "The Cross"). $3.00 net each. (Also in the Lillehammer edition, the three volumes boxed together, $6.00 net.)

For those of us who have interest in modern youth in general, and especially in the youth of reborn post-war Europe:

THE GATEWAY TO LIFE (DAS TOR ZUR WELT). By FRANK THIESS. Translated by H. T. LOWE-PORTER. $3.00 net.

For the tens of thousands of readers of THE PEASANTS (AUTUMN, WINTER, SPRING, SUMMER), and those who have a general wish to know the great Continental masterpieces of modern times:

THE PROMISED LAND. By LADISLAS REYMONT, author of "The Peasants." Translated by MICHAEL H. DZIEWICKI. Two volumes boxed. $5.00 net.

For admirers of the curious and the exquisite, as well as for readers of any of the same author's other books:

PETER WHIFFLE: HIS LIFE AND WORKS. By CARL VAN VECHTEN, author of "Nigger Heaven," "The Tiger in the House," "The Tattooed Countess," etc. New edition, with thirty-two illustrations in aquatone. $4.00 net.

Persons Who Were Personages

For students of the short story, readers of this particular writer of them, and all who would enjoy intimate contact with a feminine mind of rare and subtle quality:

JOURNAL OF KATHERINE MANSFIELD. Edited by JOHN MIDDLETON MURRY. Illustrated from photographs. $3.50 net.

For students of American social and religious history:

A METHODIST SAINT: THE LIFE OF BISHOP ASBURY. By HERBERT ASBURY, author of "Up from Methodism." Illustrated. $5.00 net.

For everyone interested in the Nineteenth Century, or in the New York of 1840-90, or in the history of the circus, or in Mr. Mencken's AMERICANA, or in the small curiosities of social history and manners, or in the arts of publicity and advertising, or in the getting of money, or in America at large:

STRUGGLES AND TRIUMPHS; OR, THE LIFE OF P. T. BARNUM, WRITTEN BY HIMSELF. Edited, with an Introduction, copious notes, and 50 pages of diverting illustrations, by GEORGE S. BRYAN, author of "Edison: The Man and His Work" and "The Ghost in the Attic and Other Verses." Two volumes. $10.00 net.

For students and lovers of either Thoreau or nature:

HENRY THOREAU THE COSMIC YANKEE. By J. BROOKS ATKINSON, author of "Skyline Promenades." $2.50 net.

For the many readers of Miss Anthony's CATHERINE THE GREAT, as well as for everyone curious about

Russian social, political, and diplomatic history; also for whoever is amused by the workings of an original, powerful, and sardonic feminine mind:

MEMOIRS OF CATHERINE THE GREAT. Edited by KATHARINE ANTHONY, author of "Catherine the Great" and "Margaret Fuller." Illustrated. $5.00 net.

For every person, educated well or ill or not at all, who has an idea that the great Elizabethans are dead now; also for every person who understands how exceedingly alive they are:

OR RARE BEN JONSON. By BYRON STEEL. $3.00 net.

For those who can profit by a crystal-clear and simple interpretation which makes Montaigne as accessible as Lamb; and likewise for the reader who knows his Montaigne well enough to evaluate an original view of him:

MONTAIGNE. By IRENE COOPER WILLIS. $2.50 net.

For those interested in the history of literature (whether the novel or poetry), in either or both of two great personalities, in a life-story that reads more romantically than most fiction, or (failing all these) in unusual typographic design:

BALZAC (LA PRODIGIEUSE VIE D'HONORÉ DE BALZAC). By RENÉ BENJAMIN. Translated by J. F. SCANLAN. Illustrated in aquatone. $5.00 net.

(Designed by Vojtech Preissig.) THE ROMANCE OF VIL-LON. By FRANCIS CARCO. Translated by HAMISH MILES. Illustrated in aquatone. $5.00 net.

In Line and Color

All of the one hundred ninety-five lithographs of an American master:

GEORGE W. BELLOW'S: HIS LITHOGRAPHS. With an Introduction by THOMAS BEER, author of "Stephen Crane," "The Mauve Decade," etc., a description of the art of lithography by AHERTON CURTIS, a portrait of the author, and a detailed explanatory index. $15.00 net.

Fifty-seven drawings (eight in color) on one general subject, by a young Mexican artist of extraordinary vivacity:

NEGRO DRAWINGS. By MIGUEL COVARRUBIAS, author of "The Prince of Wales and Other Famous Americans." $7.50 net.

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

The Borzoi Broadside for December 1927

For Youngsters (Among Others)

With fantastic humor:

TO AND AGAIN. By WALTER L. BROOKS. Illustrated by ADOLFO BEST-MAUGARD, author of "A Method for Creative Design." $2.00 net.

With all-round taste or the makings of it:

READINGS. Edited by THOMAS QUAYLE, LITT.D., and WALTER DE LA MARE, editor of "Come Hither" and author of "Broomsticks," "Memoirs of a Midget," "The Three Mulla-Mulgars," etc. Illustrated with woodcuts by C. T. NIGHTINGALE. $5.00 net.

With a passion for the untrammelled world of nature:

THE HOUSE WITHOUT WINDOWS AND EEPERSIP'S LIFE THERE. By BARBARA NEW-HALL FOLLETT. $2.00 net.

With a liking for fables, or for the copper-colored oldest inhabitants of America:

ANIMAL STORIES THE INDIANS TOLD. By ELIZABETH BISHOP JOHNSON. Profusely illustrated from photographs of wild life and from aboriginal art. $2.00 net.

With a slightly more adult appreciation of adventure and history:

MOONRAKER: OR, THE FEMALE PIRATE AND HER FRIENDS. By F. TENNYSON JESSE, author of "Tom Fool," etc. $2.50 net.

Persons and Places

For the many who feel themselves drawn to Cuba, and the many more who are curious about the personality of a foremost American novelist:

SAN CRISTÓBAL DE LA HABANA. By JOSEPH HERGESHEIMER, author of "The Three Black Pennys," "Cytherea," "Tampico," etc. Newly illustrated in aquatone. $3.50 net.

For everyone who is interested in Arabia and the Arabians, or in the humorous adventures of an irresistible personality wherever they occur:

ORIENTAL ENCOUNTERS. By MARMADUKE PICKTHALL, author of "Said the Fisherman." $3.50 net.

cviii

For those who know their England, and those who want to; and for admirers of a prose as fine and as durable as recent generations have seen added to the English language:

THE LAND'S END: A NATURALIST'S IMPRESSIONS IN WEST CORNWALL. By W. H. HUDSON, author of "A Little Boy Lost," "Green Mansions," "Tales of the Pampas," "Afoot in England," etc. $3.50 net.

For readers of D. H. Lawrence; for those who understand that the soul of a people may be more expressible in sights, sounds, and odors than in statistics; and for all who are more interested in humanity at large than in races or boundaries:

MORNINGS IN MEXICO. By D. H. LAWRENCE, author of "The Plumed Serpent," "St. Mawr," and "David." $2.50 net.

Life and Its Meanings Today

If you are sick of timidity, slavery to the machine, compromise, and Safety First; and, incidentally, if Cervantes's masterpiece ever meant anything to you:

THE LIFE OF DON QUIXOTE AND SANCHO ACCORDING TO MIGUEL DE CERVANTES SAAVEDRA, EXPOUNDED WITH COMMENT. By MIGUEL DE UNAMUNO, author of "Essays and Soliloquies." Translated by HOMER P. EARLE. $5.00 net.

If you can find spare minutes for sheer good-humored wisdom—a wisdom like Emerson's or Bacon's—conveyed in the briefest of essays:

LIFE AND THE STUDENT: ROADSIDE NOTES ON HUMAN NATURE, SOCIETY, AND LETTERS. By CHARLES HORTON COOLEY. $2.50 net.

If you are among those of us who are disturbed by recent American encroachments on freedom of speech, teaching, and research:

THE WAR ON MODERN SCIENCE: A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE FUNDAMENTALIST ATTACKS ON EVOLUTION AND MODERNISM. By MAYNARD SHIPLEY, President of The Science League of America. $3.00 net.

With Rhyme and Rhythm

For those with ears for a subtly new music that yet contradicts no fine tradition:

RUSTIC ELEGIES. By EDITH SITWELL, author of "Troy Park" and "The Sleeping Beauty." With frontispiece by W. F. MATTHEWS. $2.50 net.

For connoisseurs of New England antiquities and other "Yankee Notions," as well as for lovers of poetry and friends of "The Conning Tower":

THE GHOST IN THE ATTIC AND OTHER VERSES. By GEORGE S. BRYAN. $2.00 net. (A Merry-mount Press book.)

Music and Its Makers

CHOPIN. By HENRI BIDOU. Translated from the French by CATHERINE ALISON PHILLIPS. Illustrated. $4.00 net.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN RICHARD STRAUSS AND HUGO VON HOFMANNSTHAL, 1907-18. Translated from the German by PAUL ENGLAND. $5.00 net.

BEETHOVEN: HIS SPIRITUAL DEVELOPMENT. By J. W. N. SULLIVAN, author of "Aspects of Science," "Three Men Discuss Relativity," etc. $3.50 net.

THE UNCONSCIOUS BEETHOVEN: AN ESSAY IN MUSICAL PSYCHOLOGY. By ERNEST NEWMAN, author of "Wagner: The Man and His Work," "A Musical Critic's Holiday," etc. $2.50 net.

Fortified by Time's Approval

THE WORK OF STEPHEN CRANE. A definitive text of all CRANE's permanent work. Designed by ELMER ADLER, and printed in an edition limited to 750 numbered sets. Twelve volumes. In sets only. $90.00 net. (Details on Application.)

THE NOVELS AND TALES OF BENJAMIN DISRAELI. The Bradenham Edition in twelve volumes, each with an introduction by PHILIP GUEDALLA. $4.00 net each; the set, $48.00 net.

THE BORZOI CLASSICS. Fine library editions, each with a new introduction. (List on application.) The latest addition is WUTHERING HEIGHTS. By EMILY BRONTË. With an Introduction by VALENTINE DOBRÉE, author of "Your Cuckoo Sings by Kind." $4.00 net.

THE BLUE JADE LIBRARY.

Semi-classic, semi-curious books, republished in a beautifully designed series for connoisseurs of writings whose circulation is no index of their value—such books as FREDERICK BARON CORVO'S HADRIAN THE SEVENTH and HALDANE MACFALL'S WOOINGS OF JEZEBEL PETTYFER. The latest additions are TRAVELS IN TARTARY. By EVARISTE RÉGIS HUC (PÈRE HUC). Translated by WILLIAM HAZLITT. Illustrated from the original edition. $3.00 net.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF AN EX-COLOURED MAN. By JAMES WELDON JOHNSON. With an Introduction by CARL VAN VECHTEN. $3.00 net.

(Circular of The Blue Jade Library on application.)

THE BORZOI POCKET BOOKS. A series of 16mo reprints, now numbering over fifty titles, and including such things as YOUTH AND THE BRIGHT MEDUSA, by WILLA CATHER, and GREEN MANSIONS, by W. H. HUDSON. The Pocket Books are $1.25 each. (Circular on application.)

"The Traps in which Each of Us Is Caught"

For everybody except those congenitally lacking in a sense of humor (who, indeed, would get their money's worth in knowledge, but would miss half the fun of acquiring it); and especially for all who have become annoyed with medical books which set you hunting for symptoms in yourself:

THE HUMAN BODY. By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D. With 100 diagrams and illustrations, grave and gay. $5.00 net.

Lest We Forget

THE GENESIS OF THE WORLD WAR. By HARRY ELMER BARNES, PH.D. New, completely revised edition. $5.00 net.

An assessment of responsibility for the calamity of 1914, incorporating researches among documents recently brought to light.

Of World-wide Importance

THE DECLINE OF THE WEST.

I: FORM AND ACTUALITY. By OSWALD SPENGLER. Translated from the German by C. F. ATKINSON. $6.00 net.

The most influential work on the philosophy of history published during the present century. Its theory of civilization as a series of cultural cycles, each obeying the same law, has wrought an immense effect on contemporary thought.

At the Last Minute

Happily available on November 18, Bruno Frank's book comes into English with five-fold claim: as a sterling work of imagination; as arresting interpretation of a great king; as a translation among the finest; as a vehicle of four exquisite drawings; and as a revelation of fine taste in bookmaking at an ordinary trade price.

THE DAYS OF THE KING

(TAGE DES KÖNIGS). By BRUNO FRANK. Translated from the German by H. T. LOWE-PORTER. With four drawings by ADOLPH MENZEL. $2.50 net.

FINALLY

FINALLY and inclusively, if the foregoing has told you enough (and of the right sort) about Borzoi Books to give you the smallest desire for more information, will you not ask the publisher, by letter or post-card, to send you his latest seasonal catalogue, containing detailed information about many more publications than can even be mentioned here? He will take pleasure in supplying it without cost to you, and at the same time will place your name on his list for the receipt of regular and frequent information of a like sort. He feels that, in speaking this word frankly for himself, he is speaking likewise a word for your own and your friends' intellectual enjoyment over a long future; and for that reason he can make the suggestion quite without blushes.

And so, as we turn away to our shopping-lists, farewell for 1927. There's pippins and cheese to come.

ORDER BLANK

Mail this order to your bookseller.

If your bookseller cannot supply you, mail it direct to the Publisher, ALFRED A. KNOPF, 730 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Please send me at once the books checked:

- ☐ C. O. D. by mail. I will pay the postman the price of the books plus postage, on delivery.
- ☐ I enclose check or money order for $....., the price of the books plus $0.08 a volume for postage.
- ☐ Charge to my account.

Name.....

Address.....

.....

DEATH COMES FOR THE ARCH-BISHOP. $2.50
 THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN. 2 vols. boxed, $6.00
 LOVE IS ENOUGH. 2 vols. boxed, $5.00
 MATTOCK. $2.50
 THE COUNTERFEITERS. $3.00
 A PRINCE OF OUTLAWS. $3.00
 THE MIRACLE BOY. $2.50
 KRISTIN LAVRANDATTER. 3 vols., $3.00 each. Lillehammer edition, 3 vols. boxed, $6.00
 THE GATEWAY TO LIFE. $3.00
 THE PROMISED LAND. 2 vols. boxed, $5.00
 PETER WHIFFLE. $4.00
 JOURNAL OF KATHERINE MANSFIELD. $3.50
 A METHODIST SAINT. $5.00
 STRUGGLES AND TRIUMPHS. 2 vols. boxed, $10.00
 HENRY THOREAU. $2.50
 MEMOIRS OF CATHERINE THE GREAT. $5.00
 O RARE BEN JONSON. $3.00
 MONTAIGNE. $2.50
 BALZAC. $5.00
 THE ROMANCE OF VILLON. $5.00
 GEORGE W. BELLOW: HIS LITHOGRAPHS. $15.00
 NEGRO DRAWINGS. $7.50
 TO AND AGAIN. $2.00
 READINGS. $5.00
 THE HOUSE WITHOUT WINDOWS. $2.00
 ANIMAL STORIES THE INDIANS TOLD. $2.00

MOONRAKER. $2.50
 SAN CRISTÓBAL DE LA HABANA. $3.50
 ORIENTAL ENCOUNTERS. $3.50
 THE LAND'S END. $3.50
 MORNINGS IN MEXICO. $2.50
 DON QUIXOTE AND SANCHE. $5.00
 LIFE AND THE STUDENT. $2.50
 THE WAR ON MODERN SCIENCE. $3.00
 RUSTIC ELEGIES. $2.50
 THE GHOST IN THE ATTIC. $2.00
 CHOPIN. $4.00
 CORRESPONDENCE, STRAUSS-HOFMANNSTHAL. $5.00
 BEETHOVEN. $3.50
 THE UNCONSCIOUS BEETHOVEN. $2.50
 THE WORK OF STEPHEN CRANE. 12 vols. $90.00
 THE NOVELS AND TALES OF BENJAMIN DISRAELI. 12 vols., $4.00 each; the set, $48.00
 WUTHERING HEIGHTS. $4.00
 TRAVELS IN TARTARY. $3.00
 THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF AN EX-COLOURED MAN. $3.00
 YOUTH AND THE BRIGHT MEDUSA. $1.25
 GREEN MANSIONS. $1.25
 THE HUMAN BODY. $5.00
 THE GENESIS OF THE WORLD WAR. $5.00
 THE DECLINE OF THE WEST. $6.00
 THE DAYS OF THE KING. $2.50

In Canada, most Borzoi Books can be obtained from The Macmillan Company of Canada, Ltd., St. Martin's House, Toronto

LEAVE IT TO THE YOUNGER CROWD TO KNOW THE BEST!

IT is characteristic of this younger set to settle the cigarette question exactly as they settle their hard-fought games—on the sporting principle of “may the best win!”

F A T I M A

A few cents more—for the best that money can buy!

LIGGETT & MYERS TOBACCO CO.

cxix

THE AMERICAN MERCURY

NEW

What You Get

These are a few of the many features in the new Hupmobile 1928 Six which make vital contribution to performance, comfort, convenience and safety. The fundamentals which have been proved and improved for years remain unchanged.

1. Exclusive Hupmobile-Midland (Steeldraulic) Brakes. ($\frac{1}{8}$ inch clearance; quick, clean release prevents drag, saves power, assists getaway.)
2. Larger engine—more power. (Brilliant performance in hill-climbing, acceleration and speed.)
3. Direct pressure lubrication to piston pins. (Positive oiling instead of uncertain spray or splash.)
4. Exclusive patented device prevents carbon formation on valve stems and sticking valves.
5. Front springs shackled at spring horn. (Steering much easier.)
6. Tailored form-fitting cushions. (A new idea and an entirely new comfort in motor car seating.)
7. Adjustable steering wheel. (Comfortable control for tall, average, and short individuals.)
8. Lower center of gravity. (But no lessening of head room or road clearance, due to double drop frame.)
9. Non-shattering safety glass at slight extra cost. Non-glare; non-steaming; does not hold snow.

Twenty-four Standard and Custom-equipped body styles, ranging in price from $1335 to $1555, f. o. b. Detroit, plus revenue tax.

HUPMOBILE 1928 SIX

WE BELIEVE THE HUPMOBILE TO BE THE BEST CAR OF ITS CLASS IN THE WORLD

cxii

2 Men Push 80 Tons

A modern railroad sleeper weighs eighty tons. Two men readily push it, because there are Timken Tapered Roller Bearings in the journals.

That dramatizes the conquest of friction, which gives you jerkless, bumpless, swayless travel, and saves the railroads fuel, lubricant and heavy depreciation charges.

In this field, as throughout Industry, Timken Tapered Roller Bearings prevail because it takes more than the best friction-elimination to eliminate wear. Only Timken Tapered Roller Bearings provide the supreme endurance of Timken tapered construction, Timken-made electric steel, and Timken POSITIVELY ALIGNED ROLLS.

THE TIMKEN ROLLER BEARING CO., CANTON, OHIO

TIMKEN Tapered Roller
BEARINGS

THE HADDON CRAFTSMEN,
CAMDEN, N. J.

H A V E A C A M E L

Camel has a world of friends . . .

IT HAS earned them, you may say. But Camel is proud, just the same, to have more friends than any other cigarette ever had. And they're the best friends any smoke could have. Particular, fastidious and loyal. They've made up their minds after comparing Camels with other brands. Modern smokers, millions strong, who do their own thinking, are voting straight for Camel every smoking hour.

Camel's elected on quality. The choicest tobaccos and a blending that gloriously liberates all of their subtle goodnesses. This is the cigarette that reveals a smoking pleasure complete in every way.

You will do more than simply enjoy Camels. You will revel in their unexpected smoothness, in their famous mildness and mellowness. Camel will make a friend of you by the finest contentment any cigarette could give.

"Have a Camel!"

R. J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY, WINSTON-SALEM, N. C.